HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an inquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R.," running from Chicago through Galesburg to Burlington, has achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Route to the West. At Burlington it connects with the great Burlington Route which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Chicago on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the C. B. & Q. and Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

Daily Nearer.

Nearer home, nearer home!
However dark and lonely
The path through which we roam;
This is a journey only;
And though we oft, affrighted,
Shrink back with sigh and moan,
Our camp fires still are lighted
"A day's march nearer home.

Nearer home, nearer home."
Oh! joy beyond expressing,
That over thorn and stone
Our feet are homeward pressing!
For though we leave behind us
Some buds of hope unblown,
The sunset still doth find us
"A day's march nearer home."

Nearer home, nearer home!
O many-mansioned dwelling,
Beneath thy shining dome
No tides of grief are swelling;
And towards thy fadeless glory
With eager haste we come
Repeating earth's brief story,
"A day's march nearer home."

Nearer home, nearer home!
Soon through its open portal
The ransomed hosts will come,
To welcome us immortal;
Then be the path before us
With wrecks or roses strown,
Each night we'll sing in chorus,
"A day's march nearer hom ."

The Call to Faith and Repentar With the Promises.

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price..... Incline your ear and come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David." (Is, 55: 1-3)

[Concluded.]

"Even the sure mercies of David." This covenant as made with David related to his seed Christ, and reads thus: "My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that has gone out of my mouth," (Hence is "sure.") "His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven." (Ps. 89: 34, 37, 29.)

It gives to Christ the promise of an "endless life," and of an eternal kingdom, subsequent to his sufferings and death; and therefore relates to his resurrection and glorification in his kingdom.

Hence, says Paul: "As concerning that he raised him up from the dead, now no more to see corruption, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David." (Acts 13:34.) Thus Jesus has experienced "the sure mercies of David," in so far as his resurrection to an immortal life is concerned, and only waits the appointed time to be enthroned in his kingdom in "the world to come," or the renewed creation at his second return to earth. (Acts 2:29, 31; Lk. 19: 11, 27; Heb. 1st and 2nd chapter.)

When the Lord makes promise to those with whom "will make an everlasting covenant, even the sure mercies of David," he means that all and every one of these shall "be raised up from the dead, no more to return to corruption;" for so the apostle Paul explains it. (Acts 13: 34.) This is plain, clear, distinct, and irrefutable. It is a promise to them of "eternal life," by a resurrection from the dead to immortality and incorruption; (1 Cor. 6: 55, 57,) and of an "eternal inheritance" in the "everlasting kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ." (2 Pet. 1:11.)

THE CONDITIONS

Upon which the Lord enters into this covenant of life with individuals, are given in the context:

"Seek ye the Lord while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God for he will abundantly pardon." (Vv. 6-7.) These conditions are most reasonable, and the promise ample and large, and should at once be taken advantage of without delay or procrastination; for so great a boon as "eternal life" cannot be lost without the saddest remorse. Dear reader, do at once, "seek the Lord," before the Master rises up and shuts to the door of mercy. Do without delay. But perhaps you are trusting in a false hope and refuge, and have made

And an agreement with the grave."

Not so sure; for those who have fled here, make "lies their refuge, and under falsehood have hid themselves." They say, "Oh, Death is a friend to us; a savior, a redeemer, who will ere long deliver us from this 'mortal coil,' and liberate our 'immortal spirits' from these 'bodies of corruption,' and clothe us with 'superhuman bodies, and waft us away from earth to heaven;' or 'ethereal regions' of bliss, or some remote 'sphere' where, 'when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us. And when the Lord shall rise up—that he may do his work, his strange work, and bring to pass his act, his strange act—a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth, we shall be far, far, away so that it will not harm us.' Thus they have "made a covenant with death;" and also "an agreement with the grave;" for again they say: "These bodies will soon be consigned to the grave, their to rot and perish forever, as useless material, as they are mere clogs to the soul." Freed from them forever, our covenant is, "What the earth takes let it keep. Some believe that these bodies of ours shall rise again, but not we. Good-bye, old bodies, good-bye!"

But, dear reader, this "covenant with death and the grave" is not sure; neither will it stand, fer the Lord has decreed, "your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with the grave shall not stand." Death, the last enemy, shall be destroyed, and the graves shall deliver up the dead that are in them. The Lord hath purposed, and who shall disannul? O, death I will be thy plagues. O, grave, I will be thy destruction. When he shall disannul that covenant which, perhaps, you have made with death and the grave, what will you do? "The overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it. For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it, and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it." (Is. 28.) All the space a man occupies in death in this universe is just the place of his burial. He does not stretch himself from his grave to fill immensity, or wander to the remotest regions of illimitable space, so that he cannot be called forth to judgment from his grave. The bed he occupies is only from six to eight feet in length; very short; and the 'covering' over him is merely the green sod, and gravel and dust, which covers his body; which God can shovel out quicker than any sexton ever shoveled it in upon the lifeless corpse! 'For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain. And the earth shall cast out the dead." (Is. 26: 19, 21.)

What, then, will you do, I ask, when "your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with the grave shall not stand," if you refuse to hear the voice of love and mercy, and 'make an everlasting covenant with God, even the sure mercies of David? Which is as Paul has said, to be raised up from the dead, no more to return to corruption.' (Acts 13:34.) For, 'in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, the (righteous) dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." (1 Cor. 15:52, 53.)

If this covenant with God is refused those will 'utterly perish in their own corruption' who reject it in 'the day of judgment' to which the 'unjust' are 'reserved to be punished." (2 Pet. 2: 9, 12.)

Attend, then, and hearken now to the calls of mercy. 'Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.' 'To-day, after so long a time;' as it is said, 'to-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts.' Soon, alas! how soon none can know, you may hear other language which will fall as a death knell upon your ear if you reject now offered grace and eternal life.

'Because I have called, and ye refused, I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded; but ye have set at naught all my counsel, and would none of my reproof; I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh; when your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you. Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer, they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me; for that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord. They would none of my counsel, they despised my reproof.' (Prov. 1: 24-33.) 'I love them that love me, and those that seek me early shall find me,' says the Lord; and 'whoso findeth me findeth life; but he that sinneth against me wrongeth his own soul; all they that hate me love death.' (Prov. 9; 17, 35, 36.)

When the 'Central America' foundered at sea, and the passengers and crew with the captain were nearly all lost, a vessel hove in sight and its captain proffered to save them, just before the ill-fated steamer sunk with its living freight beneath the high-rolling waves. The captain of that vessel thus tells his story:

'I wish to warn the impenitent that delays are dangerous. It is not safe to put off until to-morrow what ought to be done this day. It was my lot, when sailing, to fall in with the 'Central America.' The night was closing in, the sea rolling high, but I hailed the crippled steamer, and asked if they wanted help. 'I am in a sinking condition,' cried Captain Herndon. 'Had you not better send your passengers on board now? I replied. 'Will you not lay by me until morning?' responded Captain H. I will try, replied I, but had you not better send your passengers on board?' 'Lay by me till morning,' again said Captain Herndon, I made the effort to lie by him; but at night with such a sea rolling, no vessel could control its position, and I never saw the steamer more. In an hour and a half after the captain had said 'Lay by me till morning,' the vessel with its living freight went down, and he himself with a great majority of his passengers and crew, were coffined in the deep. So much for procrastination! But for this delay, the entire crew and passengers of the 'Central America' might have been saved. Sinners, when urged to immediate repentance, don't say to beseeching friends, to offered mercy, to a striving spirit, 'Not now; lay by me longer still, till I have a more convenient time.'

"Haste, O sinner, now be wise;
Stay not for the morrow's sun;
Wisdom if you still despise,
Harder is it to be won.
Haste, and mercy now implore;
Stay not for the morrow's sun,
Lest thy season should be o'er
Ere this evening's stage is run."

O. R. FASSETT.

Being like Christ.

That Christians should be like Christ is a self-evident fact. To be a Christian is to be Christ like. There is no escape from this result. And I have no faith in half-hearted Christianity. *The idea that Jesus conquers half of the heart at conversion and the balance at some subsequent period in our religious experience is simply absurd.

The rule of Christ over the passions and desires of the person is absolute or not at all. He will not be satisfied with a piece-meal sacrifice. The exhortation is "give me thy heart." If God calls for the heart it will not meet the demands of the case to offer him half of the heart or a piece of it. He must have the whole or none.

It is equally absurd to claim that Jesus would take up his abode in the heart unless it was pure. Of course I speak spiritually. The Scriptures represent God's people as a temple in which his Spirit dwells. It is inconsistent with the very nature of the case to suppose that his Spirit would dwell in an impure temple. This fact is sustained by Paul. He declares that the defilers of God's temple, "God will destroy." I fail to see why it is that God's spiritual building has two floors, so to speak. This gradation and graduation of Christianity as it relates to our Heavenly Father I confess I cannot comprehend. The idea that Jesus has a class of favorites in his family in the shape of spiritual aristocracy I can find no authority for it in the word of God.

The word heart in the Scriptures is frequently used to represent the affections. In this sense I understand the word in the passage quoted above. When the sinner gives God his heart and he by his Holy Spirit reigns in it, —query: Is it possible for the mind or mental affections to be thus under the special influence of God's Spirit and the body full of indwelling and corrupting sin? It will be well to look at the question in the light of facts, common-sense and revelation.

I will say in passing that I was always under the impression that the conception of sin was formed in the mind. Jesus says: "From the heart (mind) proceed evil thoughts," &c. If this claim be correct then it follows that the mind is the fountain of corruption when corrupt and the fountain of purity when pure. And I have learned that if the fountain is dried up the stream will cease flowing.

The subject of "being like Christ" is one of deep and thrilling interest to my mind. I feel when I look back over the gracious dealings of God with my soul that I have an experience to tell on the subject. God has done great things for me whereof I am glad. Blessed be his name forever.

In another article I will examine the question, "When do we become like Christ." C. C. MARSTON.

* And we add, it is not only an absurd but a highly dangerous doctrine.—ED. TIMES.

Brain and Soul.

The lecture of Dr. Louis Buchner, the distinguished German savan, now on a visit to this country, on "Brain and Soul," of which you gave an abstract yesterday, contains many ideas worthy of thoughtful consideration. It is only one more testimony added to those of the most distinguished scientists of the age—Tyndall, Huxley, Darwin, and Maudesley, who eloberates the the idea in his work on "Body and Mind," recently published by the Appletons—that man, instead of being a duality, an earthen vessel, inhabited by a distinct, immortal, spiritual entity, is a unit, composed of numerous organs adapted to the performance of the various functions of life, one of which is thought, or intelligence, the appropriate organ for which is the brain. The cumulative evidence on the subject of the reasoning powers of animals shows that the difference between them and man in this respect is only one of degree.

But while we admit the facts and the logical deduction from them—that man is essentially a material being—must we also admit the inference that the learned German draws, that there is no individual future life? By no means, any more than we accept all the theories that Darwin, Huxley, and Tyndall, build upon them. Placing those facts and deductions alongside of the Bible, which these scientists are often disposed to reject because, as we think, its teachings have been so misinterpreted, we find it teaches the same doctrine: "That which befalleth the sons of men befalleth the beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence over a beast." (Eccl. 3: 19.) "Man dieth and wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" (Job 14: 10.) "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." (Ps. 146: 4.)

What, then, is the foundation for this hope of a future life which is the soul of christianity? We answer, only in Christ and the resurrection, as shown so conclusively by the apostle Paul, in 1 Cor. 15, and in innumerable other passages, which have been persistently obscured and put in the background by the "traditions of men" with regard to immortality which, instead of being "brought to light through the gospel," and given as a reward for "patient continuance in well doing," has been held to be alike inherent and indefeasible in saint and sinner; and the fable of a sky-kingdom—the modern Olympus—to which "disembodied spirits" are wafted when the breath leaves the body. It will thus be seen that, on this point, as on so many others, where they were thought to conflict, true science and the Bible are in harmony; and the sooner theologians reconstruct their views of the latter to correspond, the better it will be for them and their influence with thinking men.—Scrutator, in Washington Chronical.

One Step More,

"A man's heart deviseth his way; but the Lord directeth his steps." (Prov. 16: 9.)

What, though before me it is dark,
Too dark for one to see?
I ask but light for one step more,
'Tis quite enough for me.

Each little humble step I take,
The gloom clears from the next;
So, though 'tis very dark beyond,
I never am perplexed.

And if sometimes the mist hangs close,
So close, I fear to stray,
Patient, I wait a little while,
And soon it clears away.

I would not see my further path,
For mercy veils it so;
My present steps might harder be
Did I the future know.

It may be that my path is rough,
Thorny, and hard, and steep;
And knowing this, my strength might fail
Through fear and terror deep.

It may be that it winds along
A smooth and flowery way;
But, seeing this, I might despise
The journey of to-day.

Perhaps my path is very short,
My journey nearly done;
And I might tremble at the thought
Of ending it so soon.

Or, if I saw a weary length
Of road that I must wend,
Fainting, I'd think, "my feeble powers
Will fail me ere the end."

And so I do not wish to see
My journey or its length:
Assured that, through my Father's love,
Each step will bring its strength.

Thus, step by step, I onward go,
Not looking far before;
Trusting that I shall always have Light for just "one step more."

The World's Disease.

Consumption is a disease generally the most lingering, the most deceitful, the most flattering, and, usually, the most incurable. In its last stage the victim is often flattered with hopes of speedy recovery. The most alarming symptoms seem to abate, and oftentimes within a few hours of death the victim and his friends are flattered with hopes of recovery, all unconscious of the fact that the disease is preying altogether upon the vital organs. I lately read a very flattering article (fac simile of many) containing a great train of boasting on the favorable aspect of the world, especially in religion, indicating the success of the gospel, seizing upon and making capital of some partial success and outward appearances, presuming upon what is to be accomplished, and with some "if's" anticipating that soon the gospel will triumph. Great reliance was placed upon the vast and varied machinery at work for the moral renovation and Christianizing of the world. What might be done is not what will be done; and if we have no "Thus saith the Lord," all human efforts will fail, unwilling as we may be that they should fail. We all desire the success of that which is good, and as the wish is father to the thought, we are apt to flatter ourselves that we see signs of ultimate success. But let us not be deceived by outward appearances: "it is not all gold that glitters." And I submit whether this age is not acknowledged to be an age of deception? We are liable to be deceived by appearances, "an age of inward undermining the very foundations of social and moral order and society, corruption deep permeating all society, high and low, religious and political," "Every article of commerce is counterfeited or adulterated with imitations, substitutes, without regard to quality or durability; anything to answer the present and make a good appearance, to save time, and labor." A fast age, "running to and fro."

It is said there is harmony in the kingdom of nature and grace. Perhaps there is harmony and coincidence in the affairs of the world and the church (nominal). What is predominating in the world is also in the church. Says a writer in the Watchman and Reflector at the conclusion of an article on the spiritual condition of the church: "Finally it is questionable if the religion of the day can save the soul." Another in a Cumberland Presbyterian paper says: "It is my earnest conviction that many of the conversions of late years were spurious; no doubt they were sincere but deceived." Every individual that joins a church is reported "converted."

Are we not told that in the last days there shall be in the church those having "the form" of godliness? that evil men shall wax worse and worse? (2 Tim. 3: 5, 13.) Query: Does that "worse and worse" mean, in conduct or in numbers? A piece of paper may have the form of and very striking resemblance to a bank note, and yet be a worthless counterfeit. I have picked up an apple in the orchard looking rosy and sound, but found it all rotten within. Such is the condition of the world physically, politically, morally and religiously.

The world, like the Papacy, has the consumption, and is in the last stage. While many alarming symptoms seem to have abated, and its friends have flattering hopes of its "getting better," all is the result of being deceived by outward appearances. As for the result of missionary work in heathen lands, what has been done in the aggregate? At work for more than a generation, and millions of money expended, in the world at large there is not a single province, city, town or village, Christian, as John Wesley said in his day, and the same is still true with all the advantages the world has enjoyed, especially of late years. "There is not, and never was a Christian city or nation in the world"—I believe he said "government," which is equally true.

So this country with all its exalted-to-heaven privileges! New York city alone has more heathen, non-professors, than there is professing Christians in all India." In this United States, with all its superior advantages over every other notion, with all its vast wealth in the hands of professed Christians, with its vast Christian manufacturing machinery, the world is gaining on the Church. If, as is true, guilt is measured by light and opportunities enjoyed, then this country is the most guilty and wicked, and this age the most guilty and wicked of any. In the second century the laity of Antioch, numbering 200,000 inhabitants, had 100,000 Christians—one half. Persecution prevailed too. Where is the like to be found now? All my statistics and other testimony I have here but briefly attended to are from impartial sources; not from Adventists, but from opponents, men of candid and general observation in the world and in the popular church. I have from time to time, collected a number of extracts bearing on this subject from the secular and religious papers of the day. But "there are signs of better times for this work at hand" says one. Yes, I reply; but you place it one side, I on the other of the resurrection, and the final separation of the good and bad.

A Precious Legacy.

"Peace I leave with you, my peace I give you." (John 14: 27.)

There are but few parents but what desire the future prosperity and happiness of their children; few but are anxiously toiling to secure earthly treasures, to leave as legacies for their good and comfort, when they themselves shall have passed away. Yet how often do these legacies, which have been acquired with so much care and self-denial, become a source of contention and division in the family circle where peace and unity should reign. Not so with the legacy which Jesus gave his disciples. Notwithstanding our Lord and Master was poor, not having so much as a place that he could call his own to lay his weary, aching head, not even permitted the privilege of dividing his garments among his followers, yet the legacy he did give them makes his children the richest of the rich, for he left them a treasure that the wealth of the world could not buy—the priceless treasure of his peace.

And what a time of sore trial was that in which he bequeathed this precious legacy. He knew that he was about to be denied and forsaken by those whom he most loved; that already the betrayer and his band were seeking his life, and that in a few hours the cry would be raised, "Crucify him, crucify him!" He knew that extreme suffering and anguish lay before him, and deep sorrow before his disciples. His "hour" had come, and he realized it, as only one can to whom the future is revealed. Yet in this hour of deep trial, he calmly and lovingly spoke of that peace which he alone possessed, and which he was about to bequeath to his followers.

If in these trying circumstances Jesus could give peace, we may surely believe, there is no condition, or circumstances, in which he cannot give it, or in which his believing children may not find it in him. For his peace is not found in outward things, neither is it removed by them. It is Christ's peace, and is only found in him. He says—"These things have I spoken unto you, that in me ye may have peace." "In the world ye shall have tribulation, but be ye of good cheer, I have overcome the world." If Christ has indeed left us this legacy, let us seek it; hopefully, not doubtfully; for to doubt the reality of a gift, is an insult to the giver. He has himself made our peace with God by the blood of the atonement. Oh! then let us believe in him, till we find peace in believing which shall be like a river, bearing us on, and on, to the ocean of endless rest. Peace with our God, will put us at rest with ourselves, for the conscience sprinkled with the peace-giving blood, so freely shed on Calvary's cross, no longer stands as an accuser, but as a monitor and guide to whom we gladly listen.

Come then, thou Prince of Peace, and subdue every thought and desire of our hearts, that we may now and ever find peace and rest in thee.

The Baptism of the Holy Spirit.

This expression was uttered in the apostolic age, three times: First, by the baptist (Mark 1: 18), and recorded by four of the evangelists. Then, by Jesus himself (Acts 1: 5), and thirdly, the same gift is alluded to under different terms. I give the following specimens:

"And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following. Amen." (Mark 16: 20) "And behold I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." (Luke 24: 49.) "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." (Acts 2: 4.) "Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Chris, what was I, that I could withstand God?" (Acts. 11: 17.)

By a little attention to the words of God in the preceeding texts, we may learn the Spirit's own definition of this gift, thus: The promised gift of the Father, or power from on high, by which persons so indued were enabled to speak with tongues, or perform other miracles in confirmation of the Word. Every Christian has the Spirit in some sense, but as not every use of water that is baptism, so neither is it every possession of the Spirit that is baptism of the Spirit, or a direct gift thereof from God. On the contrary, there has never been but two cases of this baptism on earth since Christ ascended to heaven: the one at Jerusalem (Acts, ch. 2), and the other at Cesarea. (Acts, ch. 10.)

There was another "gift of the Spirit" conferred by the imposition of the hands of the apostles. But that gift was never called a "baptism." Still neither of these gifts has any mortal man received since the apostles' day. The baptism of the Holy Spirit is three times called "the promise of the Father;" and Peter says, "Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear." (Acts 2: 33)

What did they see? "Cloven tongues like as of fire." (Acts 2: 3.) And what did they hear? "We do hear them speak in our own tongues the wonderful works of God." (Acts 2: 11.) This then was what they heard. Thus, Peter informs us that "the promise of the Father," called also the "baptism of the Holy Spirit," shed forth at Pentecost was what they 'saw" and "heard."

This is no man's opinion, but the word of God says, "He hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear." Thus the word of God has foreclosed against the opinions, feelings, and special pleadings of men. Now when we "see" and "hear" genuine evidence, such as these the apostle mentioned, then we may believe in present baptisms of the Holy Spirit, but not until then. (Partly selected.)

The Resurrection.

I. Its nature. The Scriptures give it a seven-fold description:

1. In the definition of the term "resurrection."

2. Resurrection of life, or to life. (John 5:29.)

3. Resurrection to "incorruption." (1 Cor. 15:42.)

4. Resurrection to "glory." (1 Cor. 14: 43.)

5. Resurrection to "power." (1 Cor. 15: 43.)

6. Resurrection to a "spiritual body." (1 Cor. 15: 44.)

7. Resurrection to the "heavenly image." (1 Cor. 15: 49.)

II. Its cause. The effect is thus Scripturally defined: What is the cause of so marvelous an effect? Answer: "The power of God." (Mat. 22: 29.)

III. Its credibility. (Acts 22: 29.)

1. God declares it. See Old and New Testaments.

2. Nature illustrates it. (John 12: 24; 1 Cor. 15: 36; Rom. 8: 10.)

3. Facts demonstrate it—in the resurrection of the widow's son, at Nain; Jairus' daughter; Lazarus of Bethany, and Christ's resurrection from the dead.

IV. Its importance.

1. If there is no resurrection "then Christ is not risen."

2. "Then they that have fallen asleep in Christ are perished."

3. Then Christians of all men are most miserable.

4. If there is no resurrection "why stand ye in jeopardy every hour?"

5. If there is no resurrection "why this rejoicing in Christ Jesus?"

6. If there is no resurrection "why did Paul fight with wild beasts at Ephesus?"

Here are six logical inferences or facts that cannot be facts if the doctrine is not true. But it is true, hence we have,

V. Its order. "Every man in his own order.

1. Christ is the first-fruits. The resurrection of the dead is compared to a harvest of grain, and Christ is the first-fruits of them that slept.

2. Then "those that are Christ's at his [second] coming."

3. The rest of the dead live not again until the thousand years are finished.

VI. Its mode of accomplisment.

1. Christ, who is "the resurrection and life," must come the second time.

2 The seventh and last trumpet must sound. (Rev. 11: 15.)

3. Death, the last enemy, must be destroyed. (Is. 25: 18.)

4. Christ's resurrection power must be exerted, and then we shall behold the glorious result! M. Beck.

Borrowing Trouble.

How many of our dear friends are wearing their life away under this delusion! They seem determined to meet the enemy of comfort and good society on his own grounds, and fight the battle in distant fields, "supposing," that in so doing, they thrust him back from their threshholds. They cannot bear trouble and affliction. Their souls mourn under the thought that want may come to their humble abode. They can live well enough just now; but Oh! the future—the future—the dark, desolate, incomprehensible future. How it looms up with its wild recesses, dark caverns, dismal swamps, and its avalanche of despair! Aye, the little group now so lovely, so beautiful, so joyous, so kind and benevolent, is shortly to feel the sting of sorrow, agony, and horror. Destitution, with all its attendant misery. War, with all its carnage. Famine, with its pestilence. Cholera, with its fatality, like a half-famished lion, crouches ready to pounce upon the fated trouble-borrower. Now all these troubles are the result of an overtasked and heated imagination, making trouble that never comes; borrowing tribulation and never getting enough to repay one tithe of Satan's liberal loan. This is wrong. It destroys our own comfort and happiness, thereby often making our otherwise cheerful friends unhappy. Moreover, this state of mind is wrong because it is in direct opposition to God's sovereign and wise law. Let us give heed to the wise counsels of our blessed Savior. "Take, therefore, no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Oh! if we would only heed this instruction, what a world of care and anxiety would be raised from off our minds. Yet many will still persist in taking all the trouble that is their due, and borrowing all they can beside. M. D. Peavy.

Why Not?

"A remarkable occurrence of Protestant prayers to dead saints has recently transpired. The Methodist Home Journal, in its account of the proceedings of the late national camp-meeting, near Saratoga, N. Y., says that at a season of great interest the congregation sang with great fervor a familiar hymn, while Rev. J. S. Inskip, with both hands raised, invoked "the spirits of Wesley, Fletcher and all the redeemed in heaven, to help them accept the truth in all its length and breadth." I marvel at this distinguished man, said to be a leader of the modern day sanctification theory, to join hands with the old papal saint praying. I wonder if he never read of a rich man praying to Father Abraham. Said prayer was unavailing; much more the one offered by this enthusiastic divine."

So writes a distinguished minister of the "Winebrenarian" denomination. He is astonished and alarmed at the prayer of Mr. Inskip being addressed to Wesley, Fletcher, etc. But why not pray to these eminent inhabitants of the spirit-world, if the claim be true that they are guardian spirits "hovering over" and guiding mortals. There is certainly no inconsistency in a weary and bewildered traveler asking help and seeking information of his guide. Mr. Inskip as reported above was simply following out to its result the theory of immortal-soulism. Take away this dogma—heathenish in its origin, and Romish in its perpetuation—and there will be no more praying to the dead. But so long as the premise is entertained there should be no astonishment when progressive minds reach the true conclusions.

I would not give much for your religion unless it can be seen. A lighthouse sounds no drum, it beats no gong, and yet far over the waters its friendly spark is seen by the mariner. So let your actions shine on your religion. My heaven is to please God and glorify him; to be wholly devoted to his glory: that is the heaven I long for; that is my religion, and that is my happiness.—Brainard.

Our Gathering Together Unto Him.

The proper hope of the church is Christ manifested for the purpose of taking his people unto himself. This momentous event is to take place previous to the time of the judgment of the nations. Before the marvelous wrath of offended justice shall be poured upon the world below the saints will be with the Lord. If the Holy Scriptures are in any sense our guide we must follow them. And their decisions in any case are final. It is here assumed that the Scriptures do teach that there is a difference between the coming of our Lord to judge the world and our gathering together unto him. The inquiry itself is of the utmost importance to the church, as upon the answer that the Word of God gives to this question depends both the standing and duty of true believers. If it is certain that material signs and changes are to transpire ere he comes, then the people of God are to be concerned with them. But with those questions we have properly nothing to do unless we can do so without taking away our eyes from the one grand object of our hope. If days or years are sure to intervene between me and my absent friend, and if this fact were revealed to me, how could the duty of constant watching and hourly expectancy be imposed on me? No, the general judgment will doubtles be preceded by visible preparation; but the coming of our Lord may take place at any moment. The practical effect of an intervening period of time, however small, between the present and that momentous hour, will subvert the duty of watchfulness. And it ought to satisfy every Adventist that, as a church, they have forsaken the only true ground of testimony in admitting, through their press and ministry, that "it will require at least a few years more to complete the role of prophecy prior to the coming of the Son of man." This is more of that error that teaches, "My Lord delayeth his coming." It is not for blood and fire and vapor of smoke that our Lord commanded us to "watch," but for his appearing for us.

But to the divine testimony: "Let your loins be girded about and your lights burning." What does this mean, if it does not suggest the saints' readiness at an impending moment? "And' ye, like men that wait for their lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him accordingly. ....And if he shall come in the second watch, or come in the third watch, and find them so, blessed are those servants." (Lk. 12:36, 38.) This doubtless expresses the attitude of the true church in all periods of her earthly life. Such our Lord intended should be her position, expecting, hoping, waiting for him. The very moment the servant said, My Lord delayeth his coming, he became indifferent to his Master and unfaithful in his work. The above Scripture implies a present expectation, not a future prospect. The parable of the ten virgins is to the same purpose. (Mat. 25:1, 13.)

In beautiful harmony with this divine instruction given to the disciples, we find in the epistles the saints filled with the joyous expectancy, waiting for the fulfillment of the promise: "I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." To the same purpose are the words of the Holy Ghost, in 1 Thes. 1: "Ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus who delivered us from the wrath to come." In Phil. 3:20 we have, by the same author: "Our citizenship is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ." This was the faith and expectation of the saints who were blessed with apostolic teaching. The professing church of this day does not hold this prominent. Therefore, its doctrine, in this respect, is not apostolic.

There are many passages coincident with the above to which the candid student of Scripture can refer with profit. But it is unreasonable to be told that our Lord's return cannot take place until after some marked political changes have taken place within the sphere of this world, and yet be looking out for him at every moment. And yet the latter is the lesson Jesus taught, "Watch ye, therefore, for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock crowing, or in the morning."

Now, if it is true that the Jews must return to their own land, the great apostacy and anti-Christ manifested, and many of the judgments of the apocalypse pass in fearful succession on the living generations before the possibility of his coming for his saints, then what becomes of our pressing duty of watchfulness?

This difficulty is entirely avoided by simply taking the words of Scripture in their plain and direct sense. It is by such a method that we learn that he may appear for us even before another hour. To this effect is the Scripture in 1 Thes. 4:14, 18. The Lord is said to descend from heaven into the air above with a shout, by which he summonses his saints, the dead and living, to join him; who, being raised from corruption, and changed to the likeness of their Lord, ever remain with him. The seventeenth verse declares unmistakably that the shout of the archangel is at that coming period for "the dead in Christ" alone. Whether or not the unbelieving world will be cognizant of this marvelous transaction is extremely doubtful. Because there is not a single intimation of judicial procedure respecting the world in general. It is simply the inauguration of the promised "restitution." It is the first act of Jesus after leaving the heavens, which had received him, and where he was to remain until the promised restitution of all things. When he comes to judgment attending angels and devouring fire will herald his approach. "Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence, a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him." (Ps. 50:4.) "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God." (1 Thes. 1:7, 8.) This relates without doubt to the final judgment. But the divine purpose revealed in the Scriptures relating to our gathering together unto him, point to a period anterior to this, i. e., the time when we shall be caught up to meet him in the air. Then shall be enacted the saying: "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." (Col. 3:4.)

To the same purpose is the vision of Zechariah: "And the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee." Here it will be seen is positive testimony that the saints will not be found in the earth at the time of our Lord's coming to execute judgment upon the wicked. They shall first all be gathered to him. The righteous shall be taken away from the evil to come.

This, then, is the day for which we, as his saved and clean people, are waiting. The world we live in is changing from bad to worse. From its defiling and sinful sphere the saints will presently find themselves removed far away. The angels shall gather together his elect from the four winds. This gathering of the angels may not be under the observation of the world, even as the translation of Enoch was not. The world may pursue its busy round, while the saved are ascending from the earth, joyfully beholding their Lord. The sleeping saints shall be raised at the sound of the last trumpet. The living ones shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. But when God's harvest is gathered and safely shut in with himself, the world will know its loss. When the salt is removed destruction begins. This day is at hand. "Be ye also ready."—B. F. B., in Church Advocate.

"I Must Decrease."

It is hard to come down, to take a lower place, to abandon a prized position, to feel that power and influence and reputation are slipping from our grasp. But this is the order of God. It is said that one mark of a fool is, he never knows when to stop. The old minister who, against the wishes of the brethren, resigned a position he had long and honorably filled, defended his action by saying that he wished to resign while he had sense enough to do so, and not wait till his brethren became weary of him and so removed him from a place which he was incompetent to fill.

Men must learn to yield. They are transient, they must decrease. No man can hold his position long. It is not well that he should. God pours the tide of life into new channels. Young blood flows in new veins. The new wine is in new bottles. Whether we recognize the fact or not, we are all getting out of date. Ten, twenty, or fifty years of service does its work on us, and brings the urchins from the streets up to be our equals, our superiors, our successors.

John the Baptist had stirred the Jewish nation, and bowed them in penitence and humility. Great and small men were moved by his word. "In the Spirit and power of the Highest" he had gone forth; and so mightily had he wrought for God, that among those born of women there had not arisen a greater than he. And yet he knew that he was nothing; he was but a transient sound, an echo, a voice, "the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight." No pride, ambition, vain-glory, or self-assertion found place in him. He formed no party; he founded no church; he builded no sect. He simply did his own work. Towering as high as the highest of the sons of men, he was yet willing to leave behind him no family, no followers, no name, no trace, but rather to turn everything into the rising current that flowed Christward by his side.

"I am not He. There cometh one after me that is preferred before me, for he was before me." "There standeth one among you the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose." Such were the words in which John exalted Christ and abased himself. In the presence of his own disciples he looked upon Jesus as he walked and said, "Behold the Lamb of God; and the two disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus." Thus his followers melted away, and turned their eyes toward the greater Light that was then dawning on the world; and when men came to tell him of the rising fame of one who bade fair to eclipse his glory, he answered and said, "A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven. Ye yourselves bear me witness, that I said I am not the Christ but that I am sent before him. He that hath the bride, is the bridegrom; but the friend of the bridegroom, which standeth and heareth him, rejoiceth greatly, because of the bridegroom's voice; this my joy therefore is fulfilled. He must increase but I must decrease. He that cometh from above is above all; he that is of the earth is earthy, and speaketh of the earth; he that cometh from heaven is above all. And what he hath seen and heard, that he testifieth; and no man receiveth his testimony. He that hath received his testimony, hath set to his seal that God is true. For he whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God; for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him. The Father loveth the Son and hath given all things into his hand. He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." (John 3:27, 36)

Thus calmly and unselfishly did this mighty man tear every laurel from his own brow and lay them at the Savior's feet. "I must decrease." This was his destiny, and he accepted it without a murmur. His disciples followed a new Master. His faithfulness provoked the wrath of Herod. The burning and shining light fell under the prison's dark eclipse. Thence from the house of bondage he sent to Jesus to solve his last doubt. "Art thou he that should come, or look we for another?" And when the answer came to him;—"Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard; how that the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the gospel is preached; and blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me," his last fear was dispelled and he had only to await his end. It came. The shameless wantonness of a dancing girl, the rashness of a wicked king, and the spite of an adulterous woman, brought him to his death. A bloody sword, a ghastly head in a charger,—and then a few sad followers took up the gory, headless trunk of the mighty servant of the Lord, and sadly bore it to its final resting place, and "went and told Jesus."

The good man's work was done. He had decreased till the name that rung Palestine was only heard in saddened whispers; the voice that rolled the cry "Repent!" on the ears of the multitudes by Jordan's shores, was hushed in death;—and the noble form on which all eyes had rested, lay a headless trunk, in a dark, dishonored grave.

But Jesus lived! He increased. He increases still, and "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." He must increase. Nothing can prevent it. Jews, Romans, Scribes, Pharisees, men, devils, bonds, fetters, thorns, crosses, nails, spears, tombs, cords, stones, seals, soldiers, kings, princes, foes, scoffers, infidels, mockers, all may do their worst—"He must increase." Far above all heavens he sits to-day at God's right hand. But he shall come to earth again. Heaven has exalted him; earth shall enthrone him. His will shall be done here as it now is there. Many crowns shall deck his brow, and the kingdoms of this world shall become our Lord's and his Christ's, and he shall reign forever and ever. "He must increase"—we must decrease. Let us learn the lesson of lowliness. Let us cast away our pride and sit in the dust. Let us lay ourselves at Jesus' feet. The hour of his might and majesty draws near, "and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day." But we who become as little children and receive the kingdom of heaven in faith, and at last are permitted to enter there, shall find that, great as was John the Baptist in the moral glory of his mortal life, yet he who is least in the kingdom of heaven, a crowned immortal conqueror, is greater than the greatest man that ever wrought the work of God in the frailty of human flesh. Then shall true greatness begin. We can wait to attain it. For "it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is; and every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure."—Christian.

Scenes on the New York Stock Exchange.

Long before 10 o'clock, the hour for opening the South street doors of the Stock Exchange, the vestibule was packed with 500 eager, almost furious men. The terrible earnestness with which each tried to wedge himself still closer into the mass, the restless shifting of the crowd, the nervous twitching of faces, the compressed lips, the strange silence of friends, though standing there side by side, and the subdued voices of those who spoke, all seemed portensous of some coming shock which men were nerving themselves to meet.

On the steps to the subscribers' and members' door were a score of the best known brokers on 'Change. Some stood there, with their heads jammed up against the panels, as men who were eavesdropping at the door of fate. The faces of others were turned up out of the crowd with a half-scared, half-sad expression. All through the disquiet throng they clung, and scrambled, and tore to get a footing on the steps; among the palpitating swarm that thrust, and surged, and swayed upon the floor below; upon each, nervous, fidgeting occupant of the chairs around the vestibule—you could see that avaricious Terror had set his mark.

As the doors fell back, a shriek, a howl, went up from the multitude, as they dashed into the room. In a minute the floor was jammed with a wriggling mass of men, from whom a roar and yell went up enough to scare the demons of discord. Here a broker, with his hat shoved back, gesticulated to fifty wild and furious men around him. Arms were raised, with one finger extended, with two fingers, extended, with three fingers extended, and the hand was flung toward the speaker, accompanied by a yell, only to be drawn back and flung forward again with more violence and a shriller cry. Then two or three men would cling together, raising hands and sticking out fingers, and shaking fists, and howling at each other until the saliva gathered in foam on their lips. Suddenly another man would rush in and join them, and begin the same gesticulation. Another and another would follow, until the crowd swelled into half the room, and shrieked themselves hoarse.

In the Lake Shore crowd the scene was like an extract from Bedlam. Men belabored the palm of one hand with the other fist. They shook their fists in each other's faces, thrust their faces into other men's faces, and made them quiver with earnestness; threw aloft their arms with extended fingers, and thrashed the air all around; shrieked into other men's ears, and danced ’nd, keeping up the digital action. n the Pacific Mail crowd a horrid din arose, as if wild Indians, savagely rejoicing over a victim, were trying to give a foretaste of the torture to come. Men squeezed and shouted, and made passes through the air, with outspread fingers. Here a man in his intense eagerness to make a sale, would split the crowd by main force and get inside, only to be closed in upon and almost smothered. There a little man, in his anxiety to be heard, would spring two feet from the ground and fall, with extended hand working back and forward like a piston, on the shoulders of those before him. In the Western Union crowd every man was in motion all over. Heads were quivering, mouths were gaping, hands were flourishing, feet were stamping, and dreadful howlings mingled into a horrible roar and echoed through the hall.

Beh[illegible] the rails the subscribers stood, more silent, but scarcely less excited than those on the floor. Each man held a slip in his hand containing the stock list, and noted thereon the fluctuations from time to time. One would yell out a broker's name, and soon the broker would come up to the rail, lean over, and receive the whispered order to buy this or that. Another would stand and look on smiling, watching his broker sell stock on his behalf at a profit.

Amid all the disorder and discord, the exchange boys moved leisurely about in their bluish-gray jackets, with gilt buttons, and called out the names of brokers or subscribers who were wanted outside. The telegraph operators clicked away, and their messengers hurried hither and thither on the run, taking and receiving messengers.

At about 11 o'clock the elegant Vice President called the Board to order, and announced the failure of two firms. A lull followed, soon, however, to be succeeded by as great a hubbub as ever. Things now, however, were getting easier. Stocks that had fallen so ominously at the outset began to recover, and men began to look more like men and less like demons. But still the eager struggle went on. Here a man chuckled to his broker over his foresight and good luck. There one man fairly hugged another in his arms with delight at having escaped the vortex. Yonder a man stood leaning against the wall, with almost a ghastly glare in his eye and the pallor of death in his face. His failure had just been announced.

At 2 p. m. things were spoken of as better, and so they continued until the Board closed.

During the early tumult on the floor several elegantly-dressed ladies looked on from the visitors' galleries. Did they recognize in those contorted faces, in those convulsed and stormy forms below them, the gallant, smooth-faced, soft-voiced gentlemen of the drawing-room, or the amiable, unruffled, gentle-spoken man who kissed them good-by in the morning and called them daughter? Whether they did or not, they gazed down with absorbing interest, and when the gallery was jammed some of them tried to scale the windows of the passage and steal a glimpse that way.

When the Board closed, men who had eaten nothing that day went off to get a snack and take a drink. But the majority hastened to their offices to scrutinize their notes and calculate the results of the day.—New York Sun, Nov. 12.

"I SHALL rise and coverse with you again," said Luther to his friends. "All must be restored. God will create new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. There, all will be pure and rapture and joy. Those heavens and that earth will be no dry, barren sand. When a man is happy, a tree or flower can give him gladness. Heaven and earth will be renewed, and we who believe shall be everywhere at home. Here it is not so; we are driven hither and thither, that we may have to sigh for that heavenly fatherland. When Christ causes the trumpet to peal at the last day, all will come forth like the insects which in the winter lie as dead, but when the sun comes, awake to life again; or as the birds which lie all winter, hidden in the clefts of the rocks, or in hollow banks by the riverside, yet live again in the spring."

Advent Christian Times.

CHICAGO, TUESDAY, November 26, 1878.

WHAT KIND OF FOOD?

We always have a kind side for new papers among us. Perhaps it is because we well remember the time this was a new paper and did not get the kind words that would have helped it. (Thanks to those who did bestow them.) An editor written to in those days for a word to help forward our Western enterprise, replied—"There are too many papers among us already; and some of them must die." Naturally those who make prophecies are interested to secure their fulfillment. However THE TIMES did not die, but has worked its way to its present position. We doubt if its friends have any idea of letting it expire.

But this is not what we designed to say. We had just received a copy of The Biblical Messenger, a neatly printed, inviting sheet. It claimed to be a "Herald of Christian Faith and Holiness." But the first paragraph that caught our eye read—"We intend to fill our paper with a variety of useful matter calculated to lead men in the way of life and salvation.....Abstract doctrine and local matter not wanted." Now are we to understand that "abstract doctrine and local matter" do not lead men to life and salvation? Pray tell us; if all the "abstract doctrine and local matter" were abstracted from the New Testament what would be left? May not local matter furnish lessons of the widest application, and deepest importance? Shall the incident at the well of Sychar be expunged from the Scriptures because it was local, and the occasion of teaching abstract doctrine?

There are too many who would furnish the Lord's table by the standard of their own spiritual palates or stomachs. One that is weak wants nothing but vegetables set on. He "eateth herbs," and he wants herbs and nothing else every time. One who finds that beans and gruel agree with him excellently well, because of his peculiar temperament, would fain have his brethren all take to a bean and gruel diet. Now the Lord has provided various kinds of spiritual aliment in the Scriptures, and every kind is good; and we doubt if this plan can be improved upon. We find a great deal of abstract doctrine in them, and a great deal of local matter. We feel safe in following such a precedent. THE TIMES will continue to teach doctrine in a goodly proportion, and give local matter according to our best judgment and facilities for procuring good news.

Beecher is accredited with the saying that "doctrine is the stuffed skin of truth." To us, doctrine is more like a frame work or skeleton of truth, without which we should have a mass of flabby flexibility. What would a man be worth whose bones were all gristle? The field, however is wide. There is room for all the workers. We welcome them all to work in their own way, so long as they follow the Lord. We bid Br. Hoyt God speed. His paper is one half as large as THE TIMES, published monthly, contains some choice matter, and can be had for 75c. a year. Address A. A. Hoyt, Rutland, Vt.

FIRE—SWORD—DIVISION.

If we ever sicken of watery platitudes it is over those bestowed upon deceptive notions of Christian unity. In this connection we often think of the words of Carlyle, that the best way to prevent action is to get men to talking, and there the matter will end. We hear a great deal of talk about the theory of Christian union; but when we get to its practical illustration, we find that every unionist has his own conditions arranged. Some draw the lines on baptism, and some make a boundary of the dogma of eternal torments for the lost; but sooner or later it appears that all have their lines to [illegible]. The true spirit of Christia[illegible]y is commonly best displayed [illegible]ose who say but little about it, [illegible] quietly recognize and reciprocate the Spirit of Christ wherever they [illegible]et it, without making [illegible]y gre[illegible]r the display of fraternal [illegible]

Spe[illegible]ents to unite all Christians [illegible] churches, always, unless t[illegible] abortions, end in establishing [illegible] sects. This rule is invariable; there are no exceptions. Those efforts now in progress will end the same way, and some of them, we do not doubt, were invented with an eye to that very result. But whatever good intentions may have been connected with their origin, the results of these union movements are always the same.

The Evangelical Alliance and other like societies for propagating Christian union, cultivate fraternity with the strictly orthodox and no others. One must embrace the heathen dogma of the natural immortality of man and its hideous concomitant of immortal sin and misery or remain outside of that Union. Other societies have their tests. Let us have done with all such false Christian unity, and learn to mind our own business. If we have any excuse at all for existence, we have a work on our hands that should not be hindered by parleys with Sanballats and Tobiahs or any other hearty hater of the truth we tell.

If we understand the Scriptures correctly, the doctrine of the personal coming of Christ is a neglected truth; while the common notions of many related doctrines—the resurrection, state of the dead, the future punishment, the time of rewards, and the place of our future abode—are not only perverted ideas, but as far from the truth as they well can be. If we are right our especial work is not to conciliate our brethren who cast us out and said, "Let the Lord be glorified," but to press these neglected truths upon the church and world for their good. Our motto must be "First pure, then peaceable." The same Jesus that prayed that his followers might all be one, also declared that his teaching would bring "fire," "sword," and "division" everywhere it went. Men may labor to prove him a false prophet, and cry peace! peace!! but his own words, "Nay; but rather division," will remain true to the end.

But mark! This is not because his doctrine is in itself divisive, but because it was and is contrary to popular ideas and prejudices, and could not be accommodated to them. One must yield to the other. There was no room for compromise. It was "an irrepressible conflict." Jesus proposed to revolutionize prevailing doctrines; and it was because men would not submit to such a change that straightway there were "five in one house divided, two against three, and three against two." The reason why we are not to-day Baptists and Methodists, Presbyterians, Disciples, or what not, is simply because they will not harbor the views we teach among them. They understand that hearty union means revolution; one or the other must yield their faith; and whether we plead for or demand fellowship, all attempts at union will be in vain; and the power expended in this direction would be better bestowed elsewhere.

"It is preaching 'doctrine' that has made divisions," said a union preacher at the Illinois camp meeting, while deprecating the divisions that exist. A Methodist minister on his way home from the meeting remarked to a brother. "If divisions are in themselves wrong and preaching doctrine makes divisions, why don't your preacher cease to preach doctrine? Why deplore an effect while more or less persistently cultivating the cause? According to his own confession he has sinned all these years in which he has been preaching your Advent doctrine." And if the preacher was right, then the Methodist minister was right, too; and we all are without excuse, and our duty is to cease teaching doctrine and go back unto the churches and have at least one denomination the less. He said, practically, to those who hold our views in other churches, "Keep quiet where you are, and don't teach your doctrine; for if you push it, it will cause divisions, which will be wrong!"

Let us not adopt premises of which we are unwilling to accept the logical and inevitable conclusions. Our doctrine has been the occasion of our existence as a separate people. There can be no reunion only at the expense of that doctrine. Are we ready to pay the price? But, says one, "This is sectarian!" We deny that it is so in the bad sense of that word. Whether we sin or not in pushing doctrines that make division depends entirely upon whether we are right. If we divide by substituting error for truth, then we pervert men, and lead them away from sanctifying influences. But if truth divides, then the sect-makers are those who reject and attempt to smother it, not those who preach it. We repeat, then, we should first satisfy ourselves whether we are right. If we are right, it is wrong to enter into any entangling alliances. If we are wrong, and have no right to press our views where they may result in division, then we have no right to exist as a people at all, and the quicker we disband the better for the the cause of Christ.

We counsel a forward movement. We know this means war; but we may be indomitable defenders and advocates of our Adventist convictions, and at the same time manifest the real spirit of Christian brotherhood and love to toward even the most bitter opponents; holding ourselves in constant readiness to clasp the hand of fellowship with any whose lives answer to a profession of faith in Jesus. We can treat opposers better than they dare treat us, always prompt to meet them upon common ground, or to yield to them all we ask for ourselves; only taking care that our work be not hindered nor our faith compromised.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

Br. J. W. Taylor has located at Stephen's Mills, Steuben Co., N. Y., and will devote all his time to preaching the word, as the way may open.——Br. Wm. McCulloch recently organized a church at Equality, Ill., with eleven members. A deep interest is awakened in that section.——The Deep Creek (Iowa) Q. M. is postponed to Dec. 19. See notice.——We observe that Rev. James White and wife advertise themselves in California as 'Second Adventists,' instead of by their chosen name—'Seventh-day Adventists.' A little bit of 'hedging,' doubtless.

Editor's Drawer.

In this department we shall consider such questions as may be answered briefly and [illegible]. Topics requiring elaborate examination, or extended discussion may not be entertained.

O. L. B. says he has seen no argument to prove that there is any punishment in 'annihilation.' It is hard to argue a self-evident fact; and when any person denies that it is privation for one to lose eternal conscious existence, or, at most, that the loss is too trifling to be called a punishment, we do not feel disposed to waste time with them. Whether that is the penalty of sin may be open for discussion; but whether destruction is a punishment is not a debatable question.

Who was the Elias spoken of in Mat. 17: 12? A. W.

We know of no better answer than that given by the Savior himself in v. 13. The Elias of prophecy was John the Baptist; as was announced by the angel: "He shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord." (Lk. 1: 17.) John did this work, and Jesus found his disciples among those prepared for him by John's ministry.

W. D. T. We think Br. L. C. Collins' exposition of the Dives and Lazarus parable the only reliable exegesis published. We endorse it fully, and refer you to its pages for the exposition we cannot give here.

As to the question, 'At what stage in the Christian life are we in a justified state?' we refer you to Rom. 5: 1. 'Being justified by faith.' Whenever we exercise saving faith, which is faith mixed with love, we are justified.

C. M. K. Technically the objector you mention may be right. Rome arose in Italy, not in Macedonia. But as related to the prophetic narrative Rome did arise out of Macedonia to all intents and purposes. Rome obtained a foothold there by a policy of craft, pursued with unhesitating perseverance, until its ascendancy was firmly established. This accomplished, it 'waxed exceeding great, toward the South, toward the East and toward the pleasant land,' and thus the word of God was fulfilled.

MY JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, Nov. 2. Came to Chicago. I was at once at the desk with a pile of letters to look after. What joy or sadness they will bring as I open them I know not. We live in strange times. New developments come every day. There is but little stability in society, and every brother, as in ancient times "will utterly supplant." But it is good to trust in God. It is good to live and work for him, and the souls for whom Jesus died. And there is plenty to do.

SABBATH, Nov. 3. Spent the day at Norwood Park with the families here. I met with them at our family altars. Br. Mansfield led the service. "It is good to draw nigh to God." Most of our company profess the faith, and some live for the kingdom. And as to the present life, it is a busy one with us here. It is work, work, work, to prepare and send out THE TIMES every week, besides the tracts and books. And it is a blessed work which all who are engaged in it enjoy.

Since the changes made at the late meeting of the Association, things are working well. And I think they are making improvements that will be appreciated by all. Let us give to our servants our full sympathy and support, both to cheer and substantially help them in their toils.

TUESDAY, Nov. 5. To-day the great republic of this continent elects its chief for four years. Much depends on the party that may triumph for peace and prosperity. May God bless us with good rulers, and peace in all our borders.

I came to Buchanan to look after family interests, which had been put off for a time. I found a welcome at Br. E. Griffin's, an old friend and brother. The church here is still without a pastor. Churches everywhere are suffering from the same deprivation. Some of our ministers are seriously failing to cultivate their gift in this direction. May God send them a man after his own heart.

WEDNESDAY, Nov. 6. This has been a stirring day. As I mixed with the citizens, I was greeted by all classes with words of welcome and kindness. The material interests of the town are improving, religious interests are, as in most places, at a low ebb. At night I returned to Chicago.

In conversation with a brother on the words of Jesus by Mat. 6: 11, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake," he said," I have not got to that yet, though I have suffered somewhat." I think I have reached the place, but could not say this, or claim the blessing until of late. Now I can.

SABBATH, Nov. 10. I had rest from preaching, and so enjoyed the labors of others in Chicago. If my preaching ever did half the good to my hearers, that the preaching did me to-day, I have not lived in vain. The evening service was a special feast to my heart.

I had long desired to attend the First Congregotionalist church, on Washington street, and the time now seemed to have come, and to-night I was there. Br. E. Griffin, of Buchanan was with me. The house is a costly one, but one of the best arranged, comfortable, and social I ever saw. It is the cathedral of the Congregationalists in Chicago, but they were not formal or dry like some of the fashionable churches. Their singing is not theatrical, but sensible and congregational. All seem to take part in the devotions.

The pastor, Mr. Goodwin, is a sound sensible preacher. Social, spiritual, and clear-headed, and has full command of his audience. He sways the the mind in the way of the truth as he understands it.

The service was deeply interesting to me. I almost thought it was ararranged for me. The Scriptural lessons were Psalms 27, and Mark 4—Christ in the ship—and very appropriate to the tried disciple of Jesus.

FIRST LESSON.

"The Lord is my light and my salvation: whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid? When the wicked, even mine enemies and my foes, came upon me to eat up my flesh, they stumbled and fell. Though an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear: though war should rise up against me, in this will I be confident. One thing have I desired of the Lord, and that will I seek after, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple. For in the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilian: In the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me: he shall set me up upon a rock, and now shall mine head be lifted up above mine enemies round about me. Therefore will I offer in his tabernacle sacrifices of joy: I will sing, yea, I will sing praises unto the Lord. Hear, O Lord, when I cry with my voice; have mercy also upon me and answer me. When thou saidst, Seek ye my face! my heart said, Unto thee, Lord will I seek. Hide not thy face from me; put not thy servant away in anger: thou hast been my help; leave me not, neither forsake me, O God of my salvation. Deliver me not over to the will of mine enemies; for false witnesses are risen up against me and such as breathe cruelty, I had fainted unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living. Wait on the Lord: be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thine heart. Wait, I say, on the Lord."

Never were words more sweet than these. They are the words uttered by David, but David's Lord inspired them. They are "sweeter than honey in the honey comb."

His text related to the ship that was laboring in the storm, and about to sink while Jesus was sleeping. The disciples called to him, "Master, carest thou not that we perish?" He arose and rebuked the wind and sea, and all was calm.

He showed first, that Jesus being in the ship was no protection against the storm. More likely to have the storm when near to God. Those who live godly in Christ Jesus, may expect the storm. We shall suffer for Jesus' sake. Second, if Christ is in the ship, though we have the storm, we are safe. Jesus is in the ship; it cannot be lost. All is right when Jesus is with us.

I have just given an item or two of a rich feast from the divine word. Thank God for his words of joy and hope.

For the present I am compelled to recall my appointments, and am providentially detained about home. I regret most of all the disappointment in Arkansas. But it is perhaps for the best. Br. Lawver felt afraid to trust ourselves out with horses that might be laid up at any time with distemper; and if the disease prevailed generally, it would be quite impossible for us to get conveyed from place to place.

I find that my relations to the Association and THE TIMES are misunderstood. Some have, I learn, stopped the paper because my connection with it has ceased. This should not be. My interest has in no degree abated, and I hope to be able to do more for it in the future than in the past. I am settling my affairs in order, in reference to the future, and in due time friends will hear from me.

Friday, Nov. 15. Attended the Quarterly Conference of Southern Michigan, at Woodbridge, and remained over the Sabbath. Was kindly received by all. The meeting on the whole was a profitable one. Br. Preston and Fox did most of the work, and did it well. The cause is in good condition.

Called at Reading, on my way home and saw Dr. Thomas, Br. Case and others, who lately removed here from Vermont. They are old and dear friends. Our meeting was a joyful one.

Monday, Nov. 18. Enjoyed a pleasant call on Br. Snook, at Jackson. He is laid by from preaching at present, but is busy at work in secular affairs, to make something to help on the cause of the Master. The Lord give him success.

Sabbath, Nov. 24. Spent the day at Norwood Park with the family. I find all well, and everything working well. All that is needed is for the family of Adventists in the West to work earnestly and harmoniously to increase the circulation of The Times and give their full support to the office. The present tone of the correspondence from subscribers, was never more favorable, though many who were formerly able to help liberally, are now straitened.

I attended the Reform church to-day. The minister took Is. 50: 10 for his subject. He treated it in a Scriptural way, and cheered the hearts of the people of God. Those who are sad, or depressed should trust in God. He will give them both light and comfort.

Br. an[illegible] Mansfield are in the city to-day, holding forth in their hired hall in Chicago. This is their second Sabbath there, and I am happy to hear their prospects in their new mission are good. The Lord give them success.

Graphic Description of the Great Boston Fire.

ITS BEGINNING, PROGRESS AND DESTRUCTIVENESS.

There is nothing more remarkable in the dreadful calamity that has befallen our city than the awful rapidity that marked the progress of the flames. There is something appalling, too, in the contemplation of the success with which they persistently defied every means that were taken to conquer them. Whole blocks were literally mowed down by the flames like wheat before the reapers scythe. Granite was of no more avail against them than so much card-board. No sooner did the heat touch it than it began to crumble away piecemeal, and, gathering force and volume on its way, fell, crushing and thundering to the ground in huge masses, with the roar and resistless fury of an avalanch, blocking up the roads and blotting every trace of a street from view. The scene had more of the terrible than the grand in it. The sky was lighted up for miles around, and was disfigured by great patches of dun smoke, across whose discs burning fragments darted like angry meteors. Now it would be light as midday, and presently an ominous darkness spread like a pall across the heavens, and was only relieved by the lurid forks of flame that writhed tortuously through it, and disappeared in its depths.

The air was filled with burning cinders that were hurled wildly above, where they hovered confusedly for a moment and then descended like a shower of gold to the earth, where they hissed, sputtered, and crackled as though in malicious glee at the ruin of which they were a part. Every now and then a broad wave of light would suddenly show distant spires, sharp and clear, against the dark sky, from which the next instant they would fade like specters, as the thick, curling masses of smoke swelled upward and spread ghastly smears of black across the heavens. At one moment a faint scintillation was to be seen on the cornice of a roof, where it fluttered, star-like, for a moment, and then changed into a thin, snaky fork of flame that ran rapidly along the edge of the parapet, until it hung there a trembling fringe of fire. In another moment dense volumes of black smoke rose sluggishly and rolled over and over, turning their dun folds outward and swelling in size until they were turned into ragged white clouds through which fiery tongues darted in all directions.

Bare walls started forth from solid masses of granite stores with appalling quickness, and stood like ghostly mountains of ruin in the midst of a sea of fire. Without the slightest warning a dart of fire would leap up through the darkness, and, in a flash another large building was in flames, and presently went down as though it was so much tinder. Now one or two windows of some huge warehouse would reflect a faint light from within, and then the whole pile would brighten up with the darkness from its myriads of panes, and, before there was time for surprise, flames belched forth from every sash, winding about cornices, licking the copings, and darting in an eager, hungry way, as though for something upon which to glut its ravenous appetite, till, almost as soon as it takes to tell it, a sheet of flame wraps the building from foundation to chimney, and it goes down like a house of cards before a puff of breath.

The roar of the flames, the heavy rumbling thuds that rolled forth as masses of masonry dashed to the ground, the swelling groan that incessantly issued from the throats of the agitated multitude, mingled with the sharp clash of engine bells and the whistle and hiss of escaping steam, make a din that was fiendish in its savagery. The heat was almost unbearable to those in its vicinity. The hoarse shouts, the screams of the engines, the thick smoke from the steamers rising lazily and mixing with the spark-studded vapors above, the sullen reflections on the surrounding buildings, the surging crowds swaying to and fro, now in deep shadow and now in the lurid glare of flames, the firemen panting with a wild energy that savored more of despair than of hope, and looking in the midst of vast coils of snaky hose like so many tortured Laccoons, formed a scene of excitement that was as grand as it was terrible in its awful picturesqueness.

The march of the flames was as inflexible as fate, and as pitiless. There was no resisting them. Building after building, square after square, acre after acre was absorbed as steadily and as surely as the seconds swell into minutes and the minutes into hours. Men seemed stunned by the ruin that was so suddenly sown broadcast. Some, who a few hours ago enjoyed a full sense of that security which wealth bestows, and who now were beggared, stood gazing with a painful weariness and a listless apathy that were painful to look upon. Others shrugged their shoulders, lighted a cigar and went on their way with the true "Vive la Bagatelle" air; though their pale faces and anxious brows told another story of the anguish they tried so hard to stifle. In the midst of all the bustle and confusion there suddenly started up, without warning, numberless men, women and children bearing goods on their backs, in their arms, on their shoulders, and wagons filled with books and papers, thrown promiscuously in, burdened the roads. Here was to be seen a man carrying a trunk, and casting a look over his shoulder at the ruin from which he was hurrying away; and there, a number of boys carrying bushel baskets containing a curious mixture of odds and ends, hustled their way through the crowds that impeded them. People fought, struggled, cursed and stormed for the possession of wagons, carriages, hacks and even wheelbarrows. The sidewalks of the streets adjacent to the fire were heaped up with bedding, desks, furniture, boxes and goods of every description. The "birds of prey," who fatten on the calamities of their fellows, hovered about, eager to pilfer upon any opportunity that offered. They skulked in the shadow of the houses, watching with greedy eyes for a chance to gratify their rapacity. Well dressed gentlemen were hustled by them with a view to watches and pocket-books. They crouched in dark niches, ready to dart forth and pounce upon any neglected trifle. They leered horribly in the faces of timid women, and uttered coarse jests in their hearing. Their brutal faces, low brows, small, snaky eyes, narrow lips and heavy jaws, showed them to be the botchings of nature's handiwork, and these distinctive and repulsive features were seen in distressing numbers in every direction. They grew so bold at last that the military were called in to keep them in check, and as the steady tramp of the soldiers was heard through the din, and their swords and bayonets reflected back the fire in cold and fitful flashes, this scum crept away to the dark holes from which they emerged, and gradually disappeared from the scene. All this time the flames continued to enfold and swallow up everything in their way, rolling forward and dashing against fresh food for their wrath, as the surf beats up against the stranded vessel until it engulfs her in its maw. The firemen seemed composed. They worked incessantly and with the most touching earnestness, but they were baffled completely, and were driven back step by step by the fire they sought to conquer. At length it was proposed to try the effects of powder in staying the progress of the flames.

A train was laid; the crowd was urged backward by the police to a position of safety. Some turned pale and fled, while others obstinately held their ground until they were compelled to retreat by main force. Then there was a moment or two of deadly silence, such as precedes a storm; then there is a low rumble, a trembling of the air, a lurid flash, and then the notes of thunder, accompanied by a deafening crash, a smothered shriek of alarm and a series of dull thuds in rapid succession as the heavy beams and blocks of stone struck the ground. The air is obscured by a thick cloud and tainted by a sickening odor. There is a momentary hope that the flames are stayed, but they break forth again in all their fury, apparently stimulated to fresh rage by the efforts made to thwart them. And these scenes are enacted over and over again with but little variation through the weary night, under the quiet sky and bright stars, till the faint gray of dawn imperceptibly creeps and swells into the broad glare of day, to find the swaying crowd, the battling firemen, the lapping flames, the hoarse cries of men, the sharp shricks of women the wild confusion and frightful havoc still at work, and a thick, blood-red cloud hovering over the city and filling the hearts of all with an ominous and indefinable mixture of teror and sadness.

ORIGIN OF THE FIRE AND ITS COURSE.

The origin of this fearful calamity that has fallen thus heavily upon us was of so apparently trifling nature that it is hardly possible, even now, with a full knowledge of the fact strong within us, to fully realize that results so awful in their magnitude could have arisen from so simple a beginning. The fire broke out in the large granite block on the south-east corner of Summer and Kingston streets, and was first discovered about a quarter past seven o'clock Saturday evening. It began in the lower story, and probably caught from the engine. When the firemen arrived the flames had crept up to the fourth story, and the building being surmounted by a Mansared roof, the fire sped upward and enveloped the woodwork. In a short time the whole building was in flames, and the adjoining blocks on Summer and Kingston streets, the buildings on the opposite corner of Summer and Kingston streets, and also the blocks on the corner of Summer and Otis streets were almost completely enveloped. The building in which the fire originated was the first to fall, and soon after the block on the corner of Summer street and Otis place gave way. The flames ran rapidly up Summer street, pausing on the south side at Chauncey street, but on the other side, gaining force with every moment, it soon cleared the block between Otis and Arch, down which the flames poured as in a wind-fanned funnel, reaching Franklin square, some time before its course on Summer had swept to Hawley. From Arch street on Summer, the conflagration also moved through Devonshire, Federal, Purchase and Broad streets, with even greater rapidity than it did in the other direction, the buildings in its course being older, more inflammable and even closer together. As the buildings burned down Summer street each street opening into it became at once a funnel, through which the fire poured. Otis, Devonshire, Federal, High, Purchase and Broad became one after another sheets of flame, which, leaping and licking from one side to the other, generally catching at the roofs, went rolling and crackling along the streets, wrapping block after block in flame. If, then, one will follow a map of that portion of our city, it will be easily seen why it was the conflagration assumed such tremendous proportions. While the fire rushed down Summer to Broad, in a southeasterly direction, the main body of the fire swept through Arch into Franklin street, where, from the configuration of the ground plan, it acquired new force, as the fire which was then coming up Otis and Devonshire streets added force to its own movement, creating from each opening a motion which was almost a tornado, thus fanning the flames in Franklin street with the force of a hurricane. From this point the fire seemed to spread like a fan, the central part of which was still Devonshire street to the new Post Office building. Here the flames were checked for a time, and from that point it again spread out down Milk into Congress, Bath, Kilby, and the adjacent streets. In the mean while Summer street had been swept to Broad street, while in its turn that was destroyed to Olive, as the fire gained, passing up each street leading into the funnel, whose culminating portion was in the business blocks in and around the new Post Office structure.—Boston Daily Globe.

The Times.

AT HOME.

... New Hampshire was startled by another earthquake last week—the 18th. Buildings were violently shaken.

... The business part of the town of Galva, Ill., was burned the night of the 21st. Br. Runquist writes that his place escaped, but a large majority of the business men were "burned out." The loss is very heavy for a small place—perhaps $300,000.

... They are talking strongly of lynch law in New York city. Thirty-two murderers in the Tombs, all waiting for supersedeases, and new trials, and commutations of punishment, and final pardons, are almost provocations and apology enough for the toleration of mob law.

... Trying Times: Conflagrations yesterday in Boston, Brooklyn, St. Louis, and Jacksonville, Ill.—Destructive gale on Lake Superior—calamitous hurricane in Northern Europe—earthquake shocks in New Hampshire—the horse disease and the poultry plague all over the country—murders, suicides and criminal outrage almost everywhere—premature wintery weather—to say nothing of newspaper "contempts of court;"—what is the world coming to? and where on earth are safety, comfort and security to be found? It would seem that the age in which we live is the ordeal era of our humanity's power of patience and endurance.—Chicago Journal, Nov 19.

... There seems to be no doubt that however the fire in Boston may have originated, the cause of its rapid progress was the horse disease. The animals belonging to the Fire Department were all or nearly all disabled, and the chief engineer, instead of replacing them, chose to let the machines be drawn by hand. "We tried it a few nights ago," said he to a questioner in Boston, "and it worked very well indeed." Yet when the great conflagration broke out on Saturday evening it did not work at all. The force is supposed to be unsurpassed for discipline by any in the United States; but it was more than half an hour before an engine reached the fire. The response to subsequent alarms was, we may presume, equally tardy, and so the flames became uncontrollable before an effort was made to control them.

ABROAD.

..... Affairs are stormy in France; but they are not so bad as some would make out. France has a difficult future, and he is a bold prophet who predicts it.

..... Yedo and Yokohama are now joined by a railroad, the first ever built in Japan. A new telegraph line is being rapidly constructed.

..... A bill for the suppression of religious corporations has been introduced in the Italian Chamber of Deputies. In Germany the Ecclesiastical Rights bill, prohibiting the issue of decrees of excommunication, has been submitted to the Diet. It declares that any clergyman who shall by name threaten with punishment, or decree or proclaim as punishable, a subject of Prussia, shall be liable to a fine of 5000 thalers, or two years' imprisonment, and ineligible to office for a term of five years. Thus the power of the Papacy is wasted by its former supporters.

..... The disaster caused by the floods in the valley of the river Po and its tributaries is more general and wider spread than has been reported. Not only have the vast tracts of fertile lands in the vicinity of the streams been devastated, but the destruction has extended itself to the more remote parts of the great plain, even to the sides of the mountains which surround it. Upward of 100,000 people are homeless and destitute of the necessaries of life. Their harvests have all been destroyed, their cattle drowned, or what remain without food or the prospect of any. The destitution of the population is complete, and is thought to be greater than can be met by the charitable acts of the home government. The misery of the unfortunate people can better be imagined than described. A hurricane of fire over the same district could not have been more ruinous in its effects than the floods have been. Their lost territory would seem to be almost beyond redemption. The dikes which rescued the lower lands from any ordinary increase in the volume of the river have been swept away, and an immense amount of labor and expense will be requisite to rebuild them. There is certainly something in this condition of things to call for the world's charity. The poor Italians have not only lost that which is of immediate value to them, but also that upon which they depended for subsistence until the gathering of the next harvest. Two-thirds of the province of Mantua, one-third of Ferrara, and large proportions of Parma, Reggio, and Modena have been literally converted into lakes, abounding in floating articles of more or less value, and the dead carcases of domestic animals.

Obituary.

MACKIE—Died, in Sanilac, Mich., Nov. 2, 1872, Eld. Adam D. Mackie, aged 53 years, 5 months and 2 days.

His disease was intermittent fever, from which he suffered for several weeks at his home in Lapeer. Recovering from a relapse he came on a visit to our field of labor in Sanilac Co., in the hope that the fresh breezes of Lake Huron would restore him to his wonted strength and the work he loved so well. Yielding to pressing invitations to preach, and thinking his strength sufficient, he gave two discourses, one in the Advent chapel at Lexington, and a second in the S. H. in Sanilac, which proved to be his last. The next day he was taken down with a relapse of the fever, at the Christian home of Br. Wilson Hibbels, where he fell asleep two weeks after. During his lucid hours he was happy and joyful in the Lord, and said to the writer, with his hands clasped in mine, "All is well; praise the Lord!"

Br. Mackie's death is a great loss to the cause in Eastern Michigan. Churches are left without a pastor at Lapeer, Marlette, and Elk, where he was laboring to good acceptance.

As a preacher, he was clear, logical, earnest, and convincing; a thorough worker and an out-and-out Adventist.

Funeral services were held in the Congregationalist chapel, Port Sanilac, which was kindly offered, (ours was being plastered) for which and other kindness shown they have our grateful thanks. Sermon by the writer from appropriate words selected by Br. Mackie, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." (John 17:4.) It was a solemn and affecting time.

Br. Mackie was a native of Ayrshire, Scotland. When a young man he commenced the study of theology with a view to the ministry in the Presbyterian church. His means being limited he was obliged to abandon this scheme, and gave his attention to secular pursuits, in which he continued up to within the last four years of his life, when he had an opportunity of hearing and reading upon our "blessed hope," which he embraced with all his heart and immediately began to proclaim it to others. He was baptized and licensed to preach at our camp-meeting near Jonesville, in the summer of 1868. In the following year he was ordained, and proved to be one of our ablest speakers.

He leaves three sons, residing in the county of Perth, Canada. They were not able to be present at his funeral, not receiving the dispatch in time. John Mackie, the eldest son, expects to graduate soon in one of the high schools of Toronto. His father fondly hoped he would enter the ministry. These dear boys have our sympathies in this their hour of bereavement; and this is to assure them that every thing was done for their father's comfort in his closing hours. May the dear Savior be especially near to our lone, widowed sister, is the prayer of her brother in Christ.

Notice.—Northern Michigan.

I am arranging to spend most of my time in the field this winter. Churches and isolated brethren in Northern Michigan can correspond with me at Sylvester, Mecosta Co., Mich.

E. B. Scott.

Notice.

A good opening in Eastern Michigan for a young minister can be had, to supply three churches, and preach in other places as the Lord opens the door. Who will respond soon? For particulars address

John M. Snook, Jackson, Mich.

Or W. C. Hicks, Caro, Michigan.

Notice.

☞The church of Arena being in a great measure destitute of preaching in consequence of my protracted sickness, would be glad of a call from any of the preaching brethren that could make it convenient so to do. Arena is on the Milwaukee and Prairie du Chien railroad, about 25 or 30 miles west of Madison. Any preachers on their way to or from Iowa, could give us a call.

Dear brethren of the Northern Illinois Conference: How many of you mean to attend the Annual Conference at New Holland, commencing Dec. 11? The place of holding the next camp meeting, and other matters of vital importance to the cause will there be considered and decided. We hope to see a full representation.

Let every church send her full proportion of delegates. Let every minister be present. Come! Let us rally for God and his precious cause. The times are ominous. What we do must be done quickly.

Every church is expected to send a written report, and every minister to report either in person or by letter. Address the Secretary at New Holland.

Farmer Brown's Theory.

As we turned the corner we came upon Farmer Brown with a load of produce on his way to market. His horses had come to an obstinate halt. The way was too narrow for us to pass, and George handed me the reins jumped out to see what was the matter.

"Good morning, sir," said he, walking up to the farmer, "What's the trouble? Is your load too heavy?"

"Oh, la, no!" answered the farmer pushing his hat to one side of his head and striking an attitude. "The matter is, the critters don't pull together."

"Ah!" said George with an interested look at the sleek horses, and the load of corn which really did not look so very large. "If that's the trouble why dont you make them pull together?"

"A body would think they might," said the man, "when they've been worked to'gether this five year," and picking, up the reins he called out, "Gee up, Johnnie, go 'long, Kate."

Johnnie "geed up" with a clatter, but by the time Kate was ready to "go 'long," he had ceased his efforts, and all that was accomplished was some cracking about the wagon and considerable dust about the horses.

"Ye see," said the man, standing back again, "that wheel sticks a bit in the rut, and if they were a mind to pull together they'd have it out in a minute,"

"I see," said George contemplatively, "foolish fellows arn't they?"

"Well I dunno about that," answered the farmer, who evidently had a good opinion of his horses. "I've seen a good many husbands and wives pull apart a sight worse than they do."

"Indeed?" said George with some surprise, but at the same time stealing a glance back at the carriage—which, of course I did not see.

"Yes, yes," said the man, "you see Johnnie wants to pull to one side of the road and Kate wants to pull straight ahead, so they don't agree about it. Men and women are always doing the same thing. I don't mind so much about the old folks," he continued, "but it spiles the children."

"Spoils the children! what do you mean," said George, opening his eyes.

"Humph! a man can see that with half an eye," was the answer. "If a man and his wife pull together, if they do have a hard scrabble of it, the children turn out well enough, but if they are everlastingly pulling apart and scolding at one another the children always go to destruction."

George examined Kate's harness and brushed a fly from her back. "You speak as if you had experience," he said, "you have a wife, I suppose?"

"Bless you, yes," was the answer, "and six boys. We never had no trouble bringing up our children, fine young men they are now, every one of them. When I told one of them to do something my wife didn't take him behind the door and tell him his father was hard on him and give him a sugarplum. No, sir-ee; she'd tell him to mind his father if he wanted any help from her; and when she told 'em to do anything she knowed I'd back her up, and them boys soon found which way the wind blew. Children aint no fools. My advice to young folks is," he added, nodding sidewise towards the carriage where I was sitting, though I can't think he intended anything personal in his remarks, "to pull together. If one does happen to make a mistake once in a while it's better to hang together, and the children will soon know what to expect; hie, Johnnie, git up, Kate."

Johnnie and Kate concluded to pull together this time, and the load went forward easily.

"Thank you, sir," said George lifting his hat and walking back to the carriage. "I'll think on your advice."

As we rode back I fell to musing. Was that the reason why so many children "went to destruction," as he termed it, because their parents did not agree in their training? Perhaps the old farmer might be right. I looked about among my aquaintances for examples. There was Bert Sawyer. What a wreck he was to be sure, and had had every advantage, too. An only son and idolized by both father and mother, but they were never known to agree in what they wanted him to do. His mother told him his father was severe, and his father told him his mother was silly. I well remember how shocked I was, though but a child, on seeing his mother, one day when I was at their house, give him some whiskey, because he said he knew he needed it, only his father never was willing he should have anything that he wanted; and on the father's coming unexpectedly into the room, she hurriedly slipped the bottle into the closet. "What's that?" asked Mr. Sawyer, who seemed to suspect constantly that something was wrong. "Oh, nothing but camphor," said his wife. "Bert's got a headache." How could she expect her son not to deceive her. Then there were dear Mr. and Mrs. Calkins, the nicest people in the world, but somehow they could never exactly agree. If Mr Calkins expressed himself with any degree of warmth upon any subject. Mrs. Calkins was sure to say, "Oh I do not think that would be right. I want to do what is right and my conscience would not allow me to do that." Then Mr. Calkins would retort by saying, "My wife thinks so and so," which would be exactly what Mrs. Calking did not think; and then would follow remarks upon each other's general dispositions, and their ideas upon various subjects, especially those upon training up children, which though I dare say it was all intended for playfulness, it was not at all pleasant for visitors to hear; and their children, how they did act! On the other hand, there was Deacon Thorn's family. It was always so pleasant to go there. Seven children to be sure, but everything was so harmonious. You never heard little bickerings between that father and mother even in playfulness. "We'll see what mamma thinks about it," was the father's answer to childish importunities, and the mother's "We would not do it unless papa was willing," convinced the children very soon that there was cooperation and sympathy between father and mother.

"Well, what do you think about it?" asked George, suddenly turning toward me with a smile.

"I am inclined to think he was about right," I answered.

"I guess he was not far out of the way," said George, as we drove up to the house.—Illus. Christian Weekly.

Correspondence.

From Our English Correspondent.

We are still applying ourselves to the work of teaching and preparing men by the word of grace and salvation for the second coming of the Lord from heaven. Few are interested as they should be. The heart of the world is gone after gold, fame, and fleshly lusts, so that but few even think of things that make for their peace, and the divine life beyond granted to the penitent and believing sinner. Yet we are at our post. We have cried from the watchman's lookout, the week past, "Babylon the great is fallen!" "This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." The fourth monarchy gives place to the fifth, the heavenly and eternal. But the cry has only been heard by few, most of whom are girding themselves with truth and righteousness to endure to the end and be saved. The indifference of the masses is lamentable. You may go up to them and shake them in the name of God, and tell them their danger and urge them to fly from the coming wrath. They will open their eyes and yawn, and give themselves up again to slumber over the pit of wo. Oh! what can be done to arouse the unthinking, the unfearing, and the profane? This is the question which presses down our hearts. We toil heavily. We sow sadly. We plant with aching hearts. And as we do our work in the vineyard, we say with the query of a song I heard sung by a company of black children in your own, America—'What will the harvest be?' Often the thought goes home, keen as a knife, "Death unto many." Yet we are glad for ourselves, being "satisfied from [not in] ourselves." A few steps more and we shall take our last journey in the cloud and leave corruption behind and beneath us. Then all our future shall be the divine life in the heavenly home. How heartily do we pray for such a delightful consummation to our pilgrim pathway!

Many years ago our venerable brother, Joshua V. Himes, visited the English shores. He traveled about the country preaching the kingdom of God, planting churches after the pattern of the apostles. One of those churches remains to-day. It is a little war-worn host, not dispirited nor decreasing, but full of ardor for God, pressing on in the footprints of the Savior, determined to "Weather the blast,

And stand at last,
Safe on the evergreen shore.

To which we say "God speed." Your correspondent wrote this brotherhood a word of love and sympathy a few days since, and the following is their reply. I have taken the liberty to send it you, for I think it will be of great and wide blessing. It is the nearest to "primitive" I have read for a long time. The writer says:

SUSSEX, Oct. 24, 1872.

Dear Br. Kellaway:

Your kind and cheering letter has been the theme of great joy to the Church meeting at "The Advent Chapel," Piltdown. I am requested by them to thank you for your kind exhortation and prayers for us, and we in return will ever beseech the throne of grace on your behalf, and all the saints at Weymouth. May great grace rest upon you all, and may your number be daily increased. Be of good courage. Spare not to proclaim the life-giving gospel of Christ. Work while it is called day, for the night cometh when all work will end. Experience teaches us that the pathway is not strewn with roses only, there are thorns, also. Fear them not. There has gone before a host of pioneers who have nobly cleared the way, and left behind them the footmarks of success, so we may boldly say, "The Lord is our helper." With such a One, then, at our side, need we fear the frowns of our enemies, or even their boasted threats? No, for while success at the hand of the Lord is with us, and sinners are turning to the Lord, who, I ask, shall deter us or drive us from the noble work with these proofs of our success, together with the glorious prospect of our Lord soon appearing to "gather his ransomed ones home."

We are still adding a few to our number in opposition to all foes. We have been, during the past summer, holding meetings on Lord's Day evenings, in a large forest, some five or six miles from us; and it would do your heart good to see those foresters, with their sunburnt faces, listening to the gospel of the kingdom and the words of Jesus. And I can assure you that many of them never attended any place of worship. Some of them are the worst of persons, and a terror to the neighborhood. Yet we got them to hear the engrafted word with delight, and soon find them at Piltdown.

Last Lord's Day evening I had a meeting at Maresfield, two miles from us, in a dwelling house, and the house was crowded. We are to hold another in a fortnight. I am certain there is but one way of success, namely, to seek them. Highways and hedges are to be scoured; towns are full of pride and folly; they are almost inaccessible, at least, so we find. It is true, they may listen, and it may charm them for a while, but they soon grow hard, and all the power of heaven and earth combined cannot move them. Jeremiah hath well said "I will leave in the midst of thee a poor and an afflicted people, and they shall call upon the name of the Lord." It may be you in the towns may be more successful, but we fail there.

Yours, in hope of immortality when Jesus comes,
HENRY FARLEY.

Doubtless this branch of the church universal will gladly meet the editor of THE TIMES, when we are "caught up together to meet the Lord in the air." I pray I may be there to witness the greeting and join in the beloved exchange of triumphant praise of Jesus who is the Savior of us all.

The Pope has added to the list of Romish saints the late Queen Maria Christina, of Naples, Nicholas von der lue, the French priest Jean d'Ars, and Pope Eugenius III.

We may well ask as we read the above, "What right has the Pope to make saints by canonization?" Every Christian is a saint—is an "holy one of God." A devil cried out to Jesus, saying, "I know thee, who thou art, —the holy One of God." And it is a blessing for every child of God to know that, as he is the holy One of God, so are we in this world. A saint is a holy one. And all are holy who are washed and renewed, and waiting for glorification. Thank God, when confessing our sins, we confess also our hope in God's mercy, and in Christ as the resurrection and life, in baptism, and he adds our names to the list of saints on the records of the city New Jerusalem; and we desire not that ecclesiasticism, which places the name down on perishable scrolls. Methinks when these scrolls burn up, many so-called saints will burn with them.

Another equally silly thing is on record and this is the chronicle:

"BLESSING FIRE ENGINES.—The engines used by the Creole Fire Company of New Orleans were blessed recently by the very Rev. Canon Moynihan."

But nothing is too absurd for a church that can baptize bells and bless holy water for servant girls to carry about as they travel, to keep devils away and keep danger at a distance. But, probably, if you say anything to a priest about this, or anything else equally ridiculous that you know to be fact, you will be coolly informed it is a "Protestant lie."

The journal l'Italia prints an article on the Vatican, in a spirit true to the prophecy which declares that the ten horns who give their power to the beast shall consume the mystic Babylon. It is as follows:

"What we demand of France is a generous and loyal accord with us, such as will destroy the last hopes of the Vatican."

Truly the horns have "gored" the woman fearfully of late. And we are coming to "last hopes of the Vatican." This looks like the speedy coming of our Lord. Amen.

The Romanist is taught that his first obedience is due to the Pope. His authority is above the civil authority of any king, queen, or president, and a true catholic bows at the nod of the Pope before he will at that of the ruler of his own native land. A few days ago, in connection with the opening of the church at West Gorton, there was a "fuddle," or a "drink 'round." Toasts were given—of course, that's apostolic—when, through some little confusion, "owing to a sudden change in the arrangements," "the archbishop proposed the health of the queen," before the "holy father"—these words capitalized. It was a mistake; the archbishop thought the Pope's health had been given before. This is a matter of sufficient importance to "require an explanation." To think of the presumption of toasting the queen before Papa! So the Rev. Father Rawes has had to give an account of the affair which does not give "universal satisfaction." How men will sink their manhood and quarrel about "trifles light as air!" But this you understand is Romanist, traditional, divine.

The following, though a little out of your way, being principally literary, yet is worthy of saving, seeing it is on a religious work. It may help to cure the taste some people have of issuing "productions according to their imagination, not according to facts as they are." (Say, for instance, immortal soulism.) It is the severest criticism I ever read, and probably your readers will say the same. It is razor, fire, lightning, all in one:

The Saturday Review thus sums up a review of a recently published work, to which it devoted a page: "Besides the unnatural sentimentality of the Sons of Dives, we might take some exception to its grammar. All the personages are as heedless of this as was ever the Jackdaw of Rheims; and say 'that's him,' 'it was her,' with the most perfect unconsciousness apparently of any rule touching verbs and cases. Also, the author has hazy ideas as to plural pronouns in their relation to disjunctive particles; and when she says, 'Ye mother or sister, whose son or brother,' she seems to imagine that ye is high polite for you, which we venture to assure her is a mistake, or used to be when we learned our declensions. Why will people write when they have nothing to say? This author knows no more of real life than she knows of the nature of comets. She does not relate, she babbles; she does not paint from life, she draws on her fancy, and labels her crude productions according to her imagination, not according to facts as they are. She says nothing that the world wants to hear; nothing even that can amuse a heavy hour. Stilted, unnatural, improbable, her work is an absurdity and an excrescence, not a growth; and it argues badly for the literary taste of our generation that such trash as this can find a publisher, and we presume a public to follow."

If some people would "take warning" from this scathing review, it might save them the mortification of being shown up in the same unenviable manner.

It is no secret that the Jesuits have ever since the Italian government entered Rome, done all they could to persuade the Pope to leave the Vatican. They have failed to do this, and now are devoting all their energies to cause the assembly of the conclave that must in the course of nature soon take place to meet in France if possible, but anyhow out of Italy. If this takes place, the pope the Jesuits cause to be elected will of course be merely a tool in their hands, and they will be free from the Cardinal Antonelli, who is their great opponent at the Vatican, and who sees that the two years the Pope has spent in Rome since the arrival of the Italian government have been distinguished beyond any time within the memory of man by the perfect freedom with which he has been able to administer the spiritual authority throughout the world.—The Church Times.

From Br. E. N. Bliss.

I shall visit Chicago in December, and from there will go into any field where the brethren will pay my fare from that city. As I have no family, and no one to care for but myself, I can get along where some of the brethren could not. Brethren can write to me at Chicago, care of Br. Wm. L. Himes.

A member of the New Orleans Young Men's Christian Association writes us:

"I am very much pleased with the paper; so are several brethren here. Light is breaking through the dark clouds of Theology in this city, and at the cry 'Behold, the Bridegroom cometh!' many (say a dozen or more) have arisen to trim their lamps. Persecutions threaten us, but 'God is for us,' and 'who can lay anything to the charge of the elect?'"

From Wm. McCullock:

In consequence of the wide-spread horse disease, I fear that I shall be obliged to defer my trip to Iowa and Missouri. Although I had made arrangements to start the first of December with my team, it will now be impracticable for the present. I must wait and see how it goes with my horses. I trust the brethren will excuse the delay, as it is unavoidable. Meanwhile I will keep them posted as to the prospect of my laboring in that field, and also of the time when I will be there.

From J. B. McGinnis.

I have, I fear, been a wicked man all my life until last winter. Br. O. D. Gibson came here and preached the truth as it is in the Scriptures, and I found the true light; and my wife and myself have been serving the Lord ever since in the best manner we know how. Br. Gibson organized a church here (Palmer, Ill.) of nine or ten members. We have great opposition, but we feel happy to think we have lived to see the truth as it is and can obey the Lord's commands accordingly.

From M. B. Hubbell, Earlham, Iowa.

Br. Philander Nokes did not report that the Conference gave him a license to improve upon the talent given him. He is preaching the Word to good acceptance. There are a few here who are waiting and watching for our blessed Savior. May we all be "looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." It is a blessed hope to us. Unless Jesus comes there will not be any resurrection; for he is the resurrection and the life. We are keeping up our prayer meeting one evening during the week, and on Sabbath, besides a Sabbath school. We are doing the best we can to keep the little church alive until Jesus shall come. Oh! may all the blessed scattered ones of "like precious faith," live faithful until our Master appears.

From Ralph Phinney, Woodville, Ky.

I seat myself to say to the friends of the ancient gospel of the kingdom of God that I have just had a debate of four days, closing last Friday, with the circuit preacher of the M. E. church. I was alone with the Lord and the word of his testimony, while my opponent had two of his own preachers and a noted Spiritist to help him. The debate was on the following propositions:

"That man has conscious being and existence between death and the resurrection or second coming of Christ." B. H. Bishop affirmed, I denied.

"That the wicked and all out of Christ will be destroyed and not have conscious being after the judgment of the great day or last day of time." I affirmed, Bishop denied.

I routed him on the second day and ove him to personalities, etc., for a fuge, such as "The gentleman from e North who has come down here to ach us benighted heathen." "I hope e brethren will tie him up in a stall chain him in the yard to keep him om doing harm to the friends when ey call." The moderators wanted stop him, but I told them not to do , for 1 Tim. 4: 1, 4, and 2 Tim. 3: 9, fully delineated his character. Many ho were in doubt about these things fore, were fully convinced of the uth, and on the fourth day had raised 300 and promised to increase it if I ould preach four Lord's days in the outh for ten months. Feeling assured at my work was not done in this secon, I accepted of the offer. So I am gaged for the coming year at this ace, Hinkleville, Laue's School ouse, and Blandville.

In December I shall return home to Visconsin. If any residing on the e of the Illinois Central Railroad ould wish a meeting on that line, or e Northwestern Railroad in Wiscon-n, I will call on them either going me or returning. My address in isconsin is Waterloo, Jefferson Co. I hereby tender my love to all the thful in Christ Jesus, and pray you, ye steadfast in the faith, and soon shall all be delivered from the ndage of corruption, and put on the iritual body prepared for us in glory, d forever be with the Lord.

rom Wm. Johnston, Pennsylvania.

The "East Pennsylvania Eldership the church (or churches) of God" osed its Annual Meeting on last 'ednesday evening, after a week's ting. Much business of an import-t nature, for the up building, and tension of the cause they are engag-in, was performed; all looking to conversion of the world, before second coming of Christ. Some the preaching was truly soul-cheer-g and refreshing. But the most of was of a poorer sort, i. e. the con-ous "state of the dead," "the sweet lds of Eden up yonder!" "the man-ns in the skies!" and "beyond the unds of time and space, the saints' ure abode." There were some asing stories told (if they were only te) about how some of God's chil-en came down so calmly to the uks of the river, where Jesus met em, and conducted them through the illy waters, to the shores of immor-ity and eternal glory. Very little s said about the coming of the Sa-r, except what Br. J. Hunter said, om the text Phil. 3: 20, 21. This s truly a refreshing sermon to those us who are looking for the speedy ming of the Master, and the glori-s results which will follow.

Upon the whole, truth is spreading pidly among us, and to such an arming extent that the clergy of the fferent orders are put to their wits d to keep up the popularity of their scriptural theology. As for our ldership, a majority of them appear be very merciful to "the poor old ul sleeper," as some of them call me; hile others would fain pitch me over e battlements if they had the power do so. Indeed a number of them reed to give me a real raking; but y good brother Long, moved that my port be accepted, and license renew-, and the Eldership advise me to lesist from circulating all such books d tracts as contain doctrines contra-to our views." To the passage of is resolution I objected, stating, that the Bible was our only acknowledg-t creed, I had as much right to ex bit my views of the truths therein corded as any brother among us had; d, therefore, I would not bring my-lf to adhere to that advice. Never-eless, the resolutions were passed animously. But the advice was not rmally given by the chairman. May e Lord bless them, and lead them into l truth. Amen.

rom Geo. W. Turner:

Dear brethren and sisters of the reat family of God, scattered abroad, nd especially those of my acquaint-nce, whose bond of union is the Spir-t of God, which brings us nearer to-ether than blood relationship, greet-ng: Some of you may have said, Why do we not hear from Br. Turner? s he dead, or has he lost his interest n the cause of our Master? I answer o both questions: No, I am not dead, iterally, nor do I ever want to be. I vant to live forever; and, if I live till esus comes, I hope that this mortal ay put on immortality. Nor have I ost my interest in the truth of God. Whom have we but Jesus in the heav-n above or in the earth beneath that vill be a successful leader of the ar-nies of Israel?

My health is better than common this fall, and for the past year I have filled four regular appointments at different places, two of them thirty miles from my home, besides doing a great deal of other work, and I think I have got so I can see through, and hope to spend a larger share of my time this winter and in the future in winning souls to Christ. Pray for me, that I may work successfully.

Much has been said and written of late upon the subject of sanctification.

There is and has been a view taken of the subject which, in my opinion, has been detrimental and injurious to the cause of Christ, and that is, that man may become so pure and perfect in this life that he is freed from the danger of doing anything wrong; or, in other words, that "the dog" referred to in Br. O. D. Gibson's letter, is dead now, and that there is not the least danger of him. I wish all would take particular notice of that letter in THE TIMES, of Nov. 12, headed "Difficulties." I have the same difficulties. May the Lord help us to fight the good fight of faith and lay hold on eternal life, taking heed lest after having talked and preached to others, we ourselves be castaways; understanding the true relation we sustain to God, as begotten children, possessing eternal life only as we depend upon Christ by faith, and in this life of faith it is our privilege to grow in grace or favor with God and in the knowledge of Jesus, which favor may be obtained by becoming more obedient to his known laws. Oh! may God in mercy protect his little ones from the rocks and the reefs, the shoals and the quicksands of the last days, and preserve us blameless unto his heavenly kingdom.

From Wm. J. Bursell.

In answer to the Macedonian Cry from the western part of this State I found myself (Oct. 10) on my way to take "Nahum's Chariots." Stopping over with Br. Ober in Preston, I the next evening put up with Br. Butters, in Kasota, finding them still looking for the blessed hope. Next day I went to Windom, on the St. Paul and Sioux City road. Br. Patten accompanied me to the school house where a congregation were waiting. I remained over two Sabbaths, holding meetings during the week. Found much prejudice at first, against us, on account of the Seventh Day people, many of the citizens having heard them. But after a few evenings this prejudice was overcome and we had an increased interest to hear. The Presbyterian elder was out several times, and took part in one of the meetings, endorsing many things that had been said. At the last Sabbath morning service he remarked, that for the past week they had been listening to me on the coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, the kingdom of God, and its location upon this earth, and said, "all this I believe;" and spoke of the holy city coming from God to this earth: but on the state of the dead he differed, but said he did not wish to discuss the question, but merely referred to Paul's being absent from the body and present with the Lord, without making comment. He then announced that he had given up his appointment for the evening in my favor. We had a full house of attentive hearers, and I trust seed was sown that will take root.

Br. and Sr. Patten are doing all they can for the advancement of the cause in this new place. It is but one year old, with about 300 inhabitants. They have a union Sabbath school and Bible class, Br Manning being Bible class teacher. They have some warm discussions on many points, and many are getting their eyes opened. Br. Manning is respected by all, and his influence is on the side of right. This is a very new country, many yet living in their sod houses. The face of the country is beautiful, but there is a great scarcity of timber. Many are planting groves of timber that will change the appearance of things in a few years. I had several invitations to go out still farther to preach the word, but I had to leave for Madelia, the county seat of Watonwan Co. Br. Winters, a Baptist, had invited me. The Presbyterian house, a very neat and commodious chapel, was secured for the occasion. Commenced meetings Thursday evening, with a good audience. Announced services for the next night, but after the close, when the sexton turned the key, he said, "this door will not be opened for such preaching as this to-morrow night." I said nothing, seeing the old brother was excited. I was satisfied the truth had taken effect. Next morning the trustees were made acquainted with the sexton's proceedings, and they said the church would be opened, and it was. And the Spirit of the Lord was with us in power.

The next evening and Sabbath being occupied by the Methodists in their quarterly meeting, we transfered our services to a school house three miles distant. On Sabbath many hearts were made glad and gave in their testimonies saying, "this is just the kind of preaching we want." They wanted me to stay longer, but I could not. Many wept while we took the parting hand. I found that about twenty-five of the Baptists members here are out-and-out Adventists, although they had never heard an Advent sermon, except from Eld. Wm. Rhoads, from Illinois, when he was here on a visit some time ago. They asked for ministerial help from our conference. I promised to send them help. One of their number is a preacher, esteemed by all. He says he has been advocating this doctrine for twenty-two years. He has had premonitions of the judgments coming upon the earth. Many of the noted earthquakes he told his brethren of from three to six months before they occured; and the great fires last year he told of some three months beforehand. He thinks other judgments are hanging over the earth. He is a very humble man, of great faith and power in prayer. Many have been converted under his labors.

From J. B. Cook.

The remarks of L. T. C. in THE TIMES, on my action and words at the Time Conference, having come to my notice, I take the first opportunity to counter-mark them briefly for the truth's sake. This brother would not see inconsistency if he stood in the light and freedom that has been given me. My aim was to bear witness to the truth; and I feel as free as an eagle in the air, to give my humble testimony to the time of the second coming of Christ.

The Bible numbers, as shown by Dr. Elliot and others, foot up 6,000 years in 1873. The 1335, from A. D. 538 (which seems to be the demonstrated date by the 1260 ending in 1798) reach 1873. The thirty years suspense between the birth and baptism of Jesus, may apply, as the extent of the tarrying time, from 1843 to 1873—because of its relations to several prophetic fulfillments, like the closing scenes of the fourth and last of earthly empires—the Roman, in its papal form; the filling out of the pictures of "the time of the end;" the rush to and fro, with increase of knowledge; the mighty sanctions of God's Spirit given to the ministry of the second advent doctrine, based on the only foundation of the times and seasons given by God's "greatly beloved prophet." (Dan. chs. 8, 9, 12.) Hence, 1873 should be accepted as that to which the finger-boards of prophecy point for the end of "this present evil world;" and the dawn of the great and notable day of the Lord!

As all know, the value of time attached to every business document, deed or record, it is a wonder that our would-be-wise men should inquire its importance in prophecy, as did the blinded Jews 1800 years ago. (Dan. 9: 21-25; Mark 1: 15; 1 Pet. 1: 11-13.) The date or time is essential to the authenticity or maturity and value of whatever note, deed, or document—human or divine.

"The time of their visitation," the Jews ignorance. (Luke 19: 44.) We have read the result of such ignorance. The Gentiles are now adopting their unbelieving example; and God has revealed the horrible result that now impends over them. "God hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness," by Jesus, the risen one! (Acts 17: 31; 2 Thes. 1: 5-9; Rev. chs. 17; 20.) This decree from the Almighty; the "four" forms of "the kingdom of men," the two comings of Christ, as they belong to the very structure of sacred prophecy, our learned men seem not to know. Hence, they are not (practically at least) aware of the impending doom in the judgment of a righteous God or apostate Christendom.

Of course, this theme takes precedence at all times and in all places, I heartily concur in calling public attention to it and preparing for it.

The mistakes related to other matters—to making "the times of restitution" apply to the present passing periods of prophecy; assigning the new covenants back of this dispensation, as if indicated by Moses. This specimen is given as I heard and noted at the time, in a printed letter to the leading ones, with all candor and fidelity. Then, as to their advanced and almost exclusive light on Bible time for the judgment; with the claim of no papers proper to publish, or that would publish (or the like), others may judge. For I had the light that time, in advance of that meeting, and I thought our papers had published the evidence quite fully, and would be glad to publish still, as they certainly have continued to do since, when anything of value has been offered.

My notice of the time meeting in The Crisis, was to avoid being misunderstood. On other points, the brother's personal notice mistakes my action and utterance altogether; and this, with my private letter at the close of the Springfield meeting must suffice, for I wish only to aid every one engaged in giving the grand present gospel truth to the world. All earthly affairs—even life itself—are secondary and subordinate. "Amen! Even so come Lord Jesus!"

HAPPINESS is like manna; it is to be gathered in grains, and enjoyed every day. It will not keep; it can not be accumulated; nor have we got to go out of ourselves nor into remote places to gather it, since it has rained down from heaven, at our very doors, or rather within them.

Our Young Folks.

Don't Be Discouraged.

I don't like to think there are any sorrowful little folks. And yet I know it's so. Hidden away in all sorts of places, we find sometimes a stray girl or boy with a heavy heart, and eye dull with tears that never rain out in a good cry, but stay there until they dry in. It's all very well to say, "Run, skip, and play," but some children can't do it. They're lame or they're sick or troubled in ways folks don't know of. They often want, too, what it's right and proper they should look for, kind words and loving care; and they don't get much of either, poor things! I'll just say to all for you, little folks, who are sad and lonesome, who find yourselves awkwarder, perhaps, than other children, or more stupid, and naturally not as winsome and sweet in your ways, don't be discouraged. Wipe your poor little wet eyes, and think of one thing: Once, when Jesus was on earth, some children crowded about him, and the big people, not wishing him to be bothered, tried to send them away. But he wouldn't let them. No. He wanted them to come still closer. He said, then and there, that they must suffer the little ones to come unto him. Not a word as to what kind of little ones, you see, but just little ones. If he had said, "Let the pretty, or the sweet, or the clever, or the good little ones, come unto me," some of those children would have been left out. It wasn't in nature, then, nor it isn't to this day, that a lot of youngsters, taken right out of the crowd, would all of them be up to the mark. No, my dears; depend upon it, some of them just like you. But on they went, right in among the best, up to him and he put his arm around them just the same and blessed them. Yes, my dears, that's so. And now, don't you suppose those children walked off kind of glorified, after that? Yes, sir, they did. From that moment they had something to make them happy; yes, and some one to be good for. That's it.

Well, what about to day? You don't see any such in the streets, you say, nor any blessed Master waiting there for the children to come! Now there's just where you've got hold of the wrong end of the story. He isn't in any one street in particular, I know; but he is just as truly alive to-day, and just as fond of children as he ever was, only you can't see him face to face. But shut your eyes and think about him—think how he calls for the little ones now, just as he did long ago; and how you've as much right to press on and go up close to him, as any child had in Bethlehem or all Judea; and if you do, he will put his arm about you, and bless you,

There you are, my poor little lonely friends. Here's something to be glad about. Never mind about awkward ways, and your slow heads and troubled feelings. Go to him as you are, and see if then you can't change for the better. I don't tell you to read a chapter in the Bible, or sing a hymn. I only say, Go to him in your thoughts, just as you would with your body to any one else who called you and wanted to be good to you, and try to do better for his sake.

Whoa! The editors won't put this in the paper if it gets to be long, like a sermon. So, good-bye, my dears. Now don't be discouraged any more. —Uncle Tim, in Hearth and Home.

Mrs. Teredo and her Family.

BY REV. JOHN TODD, D. D.

"This," said Deacon Hays, "is probably the last ship I shall ever build, and I intend to have her as perfect as possible."

So he selected a beautiful model, and knowing that the owner wanted something very superior, he spared no time or money in procuring the best timber to be had, and the best workmen to be found. And then he watched over every stick as it was hewn and fited in its place, every plank that was spiked on the timbers, and every spar that was prepared. When they came to put the copper sheathing over the bottom of the ship, the deacon watched it very closely. At one spot he found the head of the iron nail, which fastened the sheathing split. The deacon's eyes were becoming rather poor; but he saw the broken head.

"Jim Spiker, I see a nail broken; is n't there a little hole by its side?"

"Not a bit of it, I am sartin. There could n't a drop of water get in there in a century."

So the word of Jim was accepted, the ship was finished and launched, and made two or three prosperous voyages. During one of these, she lay at a wharf in Calcutta. Now these waters swarm with that little pest the shipworm. They crawled all over the ship, but could not get through the copper sheathing. At length Mrs. Teredo, a very small specimen of her tribe, lit upon the broken nail, found the little hole, and squeezed herself in. Then she began to eat the timber, and lay her eggs in it. Soon they hatched, and increased till that timber was full of the little teredoes, and then the next, and the next, till every stick in the whole ship was full, and eaten almost into powder. Still the ship looked sound, sailed well, and made her long voyages. At length, when in the middle of the great ocean, a terrible storm met her. The wind howled through the rigging, as if singing a funeral dirge. The waves rolled up and writhed, as if in agony. Every spar was bent, and every timber and spike strained to the utmost. The cargo which filled the ship was of emmense value. The crew was large and the passengers many. Worse and worse grew the storm, till at last a huge wave struck her with all its power. The poor ship staggered, groaned once, and crumbled up like a piece of paper. She foundered—at sea—in the dark night—by the awful storm! The rich cargo all went to the bottom of the ocean. The drowned men and women sank down, down, miles, before they rested on the bottom! All done through the neglect of Jim Spiker who was too unfaithful to mend the hole made by the broken nail.

There were watchings and anxieties by those on shore, all wondering why the richly laden ship did not arrive. The cargo and ship were all gone, and many were made poor, because the broken nail was not replaced!

The wife waited long and tearfully for the husband; the children longed for the father who never came. The little hole had been left!

The poor widow who depended on her only son—a kind, dutiful, manly youth, her stay and staff—looked out of her humble dwelling in vain. Her boy never came. The nail had been left broken!

Scores of homes were desolated, and many had their earthly hopes crushed by the sinking of that ship, and all because the little hole was left! Mrs. Teredo and her great family had never brought about all this ruin, had not Jim Spiker been unfaithful.

Oh! how often is a child ruined by some neglect as to his temper, his easily besetting sin! The little foxes creep in easily, and spoil the vines. The worm that eats up character and wrecks all the hopes of life, can crawl into a very small hole. A mother neglected to punish, or even reprove her boy for stealing an egg, and that neglect, as he said on the gallows, brought him to that shameful death. A single bow, or a single smile, may win the good-will of a child, that will lead him to Christ. A single visit to the sick chamber, to the Sabbath-school scholar, a single conversation, or a single word dropped, may result in the salvation or the ruin of a soul.

The spiritual Teredoes are multitudinous, and they enter any hole, however small, and sink the ship. All great effects grow out of small beginnings. The loosening of a single grain of sand may end in the sweeping away the dam, carrying off the mills, and ruining a village. Beware of the first lewd word, the first profane expression, the first taste of strong drink, the first neglect of your Bible, the first neglect of prayer, the first breaking of the Sabbath. You are leaving holes for the Teredo family to ruin you forever.—Sunday School Times.

The Interleaved Bible

A pressure of cares has delayed the publication of this Bible. We hope to get it out within a month.

Accounts Due.

There is a large amount due on Book Accounts, in some varying from one to fifty dollars and upwards. Prompt payment will greatly relieve our finances. It is only a little for each one; but the aggregate is a large amount.

Some to whom we sent "Statements of Account" last summer have never made any reply at all. We want to hear from you, and soon. These many little items make up a heavy burden for us to carry. "Let every one bear their own burden," and our own will be very much lighter.

Renew Your Subscriptions.

We are sending notices to all our subscribers whose time expires this year. In some cases we receive remittances after these notices are prepared and forwarded to the postoffice. If any receive notices after they have sent in their renewals, they can keep the "return envelope" for another occasion.

We have waited patiently upon hundreds of our subscribers for months, and, in some cases two years or more. We trust now every one will promptly remit for past dues, and for six months or a year in advance.

Believing the time to be short with a great work before us in preparing people for the soon coming judgment, and believing that all our efforts should be brought into harmonious action for the spreading of light by the distribution of tracts, preaching of the Word, and by other gospel means; therefore, resolved that we extend a call to all the preachers, churches, and others, living in the eastern part of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, and the District of Columbia, who love the appearing of our Lord and Savior, to meet in conference, commencing Thursday eve., Nov. 28, and continue over the following Sabbath, Dec. 1, at the Advent Christian Hall, corner of Ninth and Spring Garden Streets, Philadelphia, for the purpose of organizing a conference embracing the above named territory.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an inquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R.," running from Chicago through Galesburg to Burlington, has achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Route to the West. At Burlington it connects with the great Burlington Route which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Chicago on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the C. B. & Q. and Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

Additional Paragraphs on Technical Sanctification.

To the Editor of the Times:

I have perhaps already sufficiently deprecated any such presumption on my part as would set my judgment "up" against any of the elder and approved brethren who have opposite views to my own on the subject I treat. We certainly do not fail to hear and read much from the specifically, dogmatically sanctified; those who claim, profess, and magnetizingly announce the Second Blessing. I confess it has a fascinating appearance, and I am myself in no way prejudiced against it as a man, from the first view. So for charity (and modesty) on the one hand, and a proclamation of unusual disposition of candor on the other, I am balanced fairly for this article.

And because I have concluded after much reflection to speak with considerable directness and emphasis on the theme, I wish, especially, to gain the audience I think I am entitled to, in frank and earnest minds. It does not at least seem probable, that I have any other than a sincere interest in this writing; to be published so far away from home, and to a majority of readers whom I shall not see on this earth.

What has he to say, after such a preface? Sure enough:—

I speak of a marvelous thing! How, amid many and strange, and curious vicissitudes the truths the Advent Times sets forth have gained and gathered, and still make proselytes and hold fast believing souls. Fanaticism, stupidity, folly of every incarnate sort, has been displayed under the banner of the sect called Second Adventists. "Visions" by coarse women and silly declamations by crazy men have been put to the general account; and with other like things have made a sum total that were enough to swamp anything which had not the grace because the faith of the gospel for a foundation stone. * Of these things there was much that is unique, entirely original for Second Adventism. The devil has apparently helped more weak minds into the Second Advent circles of counsel, for his own purposes, than into the folds of the orthodox denominations. Many weak minds that he did not so help have been made strong through the power of the Holy Spirit, working in them to will and to do; so that wise heads have not done so much for the cause, nor wrought with greater prudence and sagacity. But it has not always been so. Strong minds in conscious and wicked error have led captive feeble brains that followed because they could not reason against plausibilities, and had not acquired or vouchsafed extraordinary assistance. In this I rejoice: because the Advent cause has withstood the shrewdest labor of the evil one on the classes commonly considered most readily deceived and misled.

We looked for some new dodge of the enemy. But no; there was to be a change in the tactics. An old, and I should think an exploded humbug was to be revived; and this is to please some within and to keep afar off thousands, and overturn the faith of hundreds. The Second Blessing! That is it. I arraign it! I call it a fraud! I denounce it as an imposition. Not one syllable of personality shall intentionally escape me; but the error I must have my say about, or this letter falls altogether into the waste basket.

There is no such thing as a "Second Blessing," as the preachers hurrah it forth. All that is claimed legitimately for the context of the sermon of the advocate belongs to the everywhere-acknowledged creed of honest Christianity. But the moment you get up to the struck-by-lightning consecration, you pass into the land of folly. I present it in a few challenges, and by contradicting I say:

1. No man in this life is absolutely free from temptation. The Methodist Second Blessingites professed perfection. Where this ceased to be ridiculous it became impious.

2. There is to be a constant growth in grace. This negatives all the great pretensions of the thrice-refined sanctified. A growth implies a steady progress; more indeed, in one season than another; yet, after all, what we may term gradual. Otherwise, experience, trial, sorrow, joy, passes for naught. In other words, the Sanctificationists deny discipline after the alleged turning point of the Second Blessing. They may dispute this charge in letters, but the logic of the condition is irresistible.

3. Men are not normally to be either in a constant state of enthusiasm or nerveless placidity. It is against the order of nature that they should be. There must be ups and downs in life in feeling as well as in fact. A perfectly uniform temperature makes a bad climate for all except consumptives, and they are only flattered a little by the even atmosphere.

4. A man ought, in one sense, to reconsecrate himself each day, and Christians try to do this formally or in some conscious steps of advance. Then where is the religious monopoly of this sanctification fixed? At what audacious hour? "Giving up all we have to Christ." Is that the date of sanctification? How about gaining more than we ever dreamed of possessing when we fancied we gave up all we could summons or estimate? And what about a man assuming to take an inventory of his worldly and spiritual possessions and faculties and delivering them up? Will not conceit and arrogance be the almost invariable concomitants or result? How is your observation on that point?

I only profess to touch here and there; to excite contemplation in the same vein and direction I have taken. If I am wrong I wish to stand corrected.

Now, I could cite Scripture for my denial of the asserted truth of the Second Blessing in long series; but it would be picking out special verses to prove what appears to come from the entire tone and tenor of the Bible—if it is not a wise condition of mind to be in — complacent "sanctification." I will reason back to the Scriptures as they send us out; and find the Bible as re-read, confirmed if you please by the human judgment it has enlightened.

A bad doctrine should be met squarely at the threshhold; and because those who introduce that vicious doctrine claim to be over-good people and confess that they suspect that those who disagree with them may or must be very bad people, or "carnal," is no reason why there should not be a good-natured persistence in the Christian contest.

I will speak of my own observation of practical effects. I have lived among sanctified sanctificationists a great portion of my earlier years, after I came to such discretion as puberty brought me. Some were very good people, most excellent. But these I now see did not understand the doctrine they instinctively and by force of surroundings, professed. The genuine aggressive sanctified sanctificationists whom I have known in my youth, made the prayer meeting intolerable to me by oh, those long, tedious, platitude prayers. This on Sunday. The week days they consumed in close business, shaving notes, and selling hard cider. This was in the North. Subsequently I went with the same class among the negroes of the South, among whom I labored somewhat for their attempted spiritual benefit. The specially sanctified negroes would pray all night and steal chickens in the morning.

One result has been invariable under my sight. The sanctified sanctificationist became at once—if such was not his character before—a spiritual egotist and a happy criticiser of the errors and foibles of other professed Christians, magnifying faults, blowing life into the canvass of dead slanders; thoroughly sure of his own calling and election, and convinced and convincing as to the unclean condition of almost every other human breast.

If my observation has been limited or unfortunate I am anxious to be corrected by opposite authorities' testimony. But I cannot be wrong in this: that when one sets up his inner life and culture as superior to all others, except the others recite the same creed of sanctification, the standard man has passed into this state of mania—that being the only charitable deduction.

Conversion is a turning to God. More and more as we see the scope and conclusion of things earthly will we yearn for a service approaching perfection. But we poor, weak ones, in our very infirmities, may at once mourn and rejoice; unworthy ourselves, yet having conscientiously striven, the Advocate helps, and restores, and raises, and keeps for better deeds, day by day.

Can we make the world realize that the end is near; the awful day of judgment and perdition of all ungodly men? Then will hearing men who can be saved turn, repent, and serve the living and only true God. And their best but necessarily imperfect service will be accepted; and these lead to higher and brighter (because stronger) experiences.

The Advent Church has, heretofore, as a whole, in my belief, been most free from the peculiar error now here opposed, and that is the reason why I think there has been more "clean hearts" in it in proportion than in any other denominational fold, with all its attached or detaching or demoralizing isms and outre isms. It has hitherto almost wholly escaped this cant doctrine of Methodism and Mormonism. I trust there is no alarming sign of an extended spread of the cant of the sanctified sanctificationists in this last of years, in the company of watchers who are announced as waiting for the coming One. * This reminds us of a remark by Prof. N. N. Whiting some years since, to the effect that nothing impressed him more strongly with the idea that the Advent movement was of God, than the fact that it survived the blunders of its friends, real and professed. Ed. Times.

Materialism.

The old heathen idea that there is some malignant evil principle inherent in matter, seems fully to have permeated modern theology. So much so at least that every thing material is regarded as necessarily gross and debasing; that in order to the future perfection of the redeemed they must exist in an immaterial state—themselves and all their surroundings absolutely immaterial. But when we talk of an immaterial world and immaterial beings in it, what do we know, or can know of any such state? Is not the whole purely imaginary; something that does not and cannot have any real existence—a nonentity?

And which is the more rational and attractive, such an ideal state of being, or a real and tangible one? I shall ever remember the offence taken by a clergyman many years ago at the idea advanced in a discourse that the resurrection body would be material. Just as though any connection with matter must stamp the coming life as necessarily low, sordid, and imperfect. But purity and perfection are terms quite as applicable to matter as to mind. Indeed with the former may be associated the highest perfection and purity, while to the latter is chargable all the evil and rebellion of God's universe.

This theological disgust of materialism is nothing but a sentimental Vandalism that would leave nothing of all that is grand and beautiful in God's works by which his intelligent creatures can form some just ideas of his greatness and glory. How little could we estimate the powers of the great masters of art, had they not given those material forms to their conceptions, which have come down to us to be gazed upon and admired. And only when we enter the great temple of God's material universe do we have any adequate disclosures of the wisdom, majesty and power of the Deity. Here all his works praise him. The earth and the heavens declare his glory, and the firmament showeth his handy work. And yet from all these, this immaterialistic theology would turn away in disgust as being too gross to have any part or place in the coming life. But are men so to lose their senses in the coming world as to take no pleasure in the material works of God which have here in all ages afforded to the pure and the good the greatest delight; and were God to indulge such a whim, and destroy all material things, could immaterialists themselves do otherwise than feel that such an event must inflict an infinite loss to his universe? Why then this sickly sentimentalism about matter?

What more beautiful and graceful than the human form! with what perfection is wrought the hand! how divine the face! And would not such a real being glorified, such a material existence perfected, made immortal in all his powers, indicate a life infinitely preferable, because it is real, to that which is immaterial and hence ideal?

How exquisitly pure and beautiful is God's world of flowers. And yet these wonderful creations, so much admired, with all their endless variety of forms and colors, are nothing more than material things. But for all this are they any the less pure and lovely? Or would they display more the power and wisdom of the divine being had they no real material existence?

What attractive loveliness and beauty exists in the landscape. The green fields, the shady groves, the pearly streams, the blending of all that is lovely in earth and skies and water; how enchanting the view. And how infinitely do such material displays of God's handy work outweigh all fantastic forms, or ideal creations. And what a universe in extent and grandeur has God created. What a wealth of beauty has he lavished upon the heavens above and the earth beneath. And what can be the great end and object of all this, other than to display his own glory, and add to the happiness of his intelligent creatures; not the wicked and rebellious, but the purest and highest intelligences that he hath made? And do Christian men know what they are doing or what they are talking about when they affect to spurn all material things as connected with the life and the world to come? It is manifestly a human wisdom that "is foolishness with God."

If to gain an immaterial state, and float eternally through space, or beyond its bounds exempt from the presence of all material things be the reward of virtue, would there not be a great temptation to reflecting minds to fall so far short of the goal at least as still to dwell and commune with God amid the astounding glories of his material universe? Even earth as it is, would be a heaven, were sin and the curse removed, and all hearts filled with purest love. And when God as he has promised, shall make all things new, swallow up death in victory, and fill the world with his glory, the very fact that while all our surroundings are so perfect and beautiful, they are nevertheless material and abiding, will add infinite joy and satisfaction to the redeemed.

Blessed hope! That the saints of God are to inherit something instead or nothing; and are to be somebody, instead of nobody, in the coming life So it is written "That I may cause them that love me to inherit substance." (Prov. 8: 21.) L. C. Collins.

Prayer for Help in Time of Need.

O Lord! be thou my keeper, when I to sins incline;
Thou knowest, Lord, our troubles, Oh, help me, then, with mine!
And grant, Lord, that my heart may even be as thine.

Oh, Lord! remember me, when thy kingdom thou hast taken,
And give me strength, my God, that my faith may not be shaken;
And may each sinner's heart to a sense of guilt awaken!

Thou knowest all my failing, thou knowest all my sin;
Oh! give me strength, my God, a new life to begin!
And grant that in the kingdom I a glorious crown may win.

And help me, now, Oh Lord! with thy right hand uphold me;
Thou wilt not let me fall, for this thy Book has told me.
I feel my strength is failing, in mercy then behold me.

My God! when Satan tempts me, Oh give me grace to stand!
To overcome all enemies, and gain the glorious land;
Then I will stand and praise thee with all that saintly band.

And there I'll sing thy praise in that day which knows no night,
For thou hast given me strength, and helped me through the fight,
And led me through the darkness into the heavenly light.

A Novelty Worth Notice.

"THE UNPREACHED GOSPEL.

A tract with this pretentious and paradoxical heading was imported from England some years ago. Some have, I think, been taken in by it. Some have plunged into the mouth of the abyss it opens so far as to endorse and adopt a kind of logical habeas corpus to rescue even the betrayer of the Son of God—Judas Iscariot—from his foretold and long-since accomplished doom! Nay, more; to restore and enthrone him as one of the twelve apostles of the Lamb! [If so, they would set St. Paul aside.]

It is indeed the "The Unpreached Gospel," for hitherto no patriarch, prophet, or priest of Israel; no apostle, pastor, or teacher sent of God, has hinted it. It is another gospel which yet is not another, but a "perversion of the gospel of Christ." (Gal. 1: 6–9.) I fear, lest as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so others by this may be "corrupted from the simplicity there is in Christ." (2 Cor. 11: 3, 4.) "Beloved, believe not every spirit; but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world." (1 John 4: 1–6.) The Spirit of God is one. He speaks on the one line, and within the one range of primal truth—the law and gospel promise. (Gen. 2 and 3.) These "seeds" are being yet unfolded. "SIN hath reigned unto DEATH!" but "grace reigns through righteousness unto eternal life [only] by Jesus Christ our Lord." That is, old Adam, Cain, & Co., apostates of all ages, like Judas, "die the DEATH," while the heirs of promise "are embraced in the covenant of life, according to the glorious gospel of the blessed God."

But this "other gospel" has a roundabout "climbing up another way" through hades, by an hitherto unseen back-door entrance that would unsettle and upset and set aside all the foundations of God's government over the world. For if death, the penalty of "law," is "made of none effect," then the promise of deliverance therefrom is annulled as needless. It is the stability of the law—moral government—that made the propitiation of our sins and for the world essential. (Rom. 3: 20–31.)

With these premises, I notice "The Unpreached Gospel."

1. It begins one side of all the cardinal points of Bible truth relating to the sanctions of moral government, and all the memorials of "the sinfulness of sin." It ignores "the terrors of the Lord," and all the records of accomplished sin in death, (as I see.)

2. It does not, like St. Paul, "establish the law," but subverts it; takes a new departure, and, with the subtilty of sin, glozes over all pertaining to the unjust reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished. (2 Pet. 2; Jude 2.)

3. An unmistakable test of its falsity is made in the case of Judas. God had foretold his character and his destiny. (Acts 1: 16–20.) Nay, God has recorded his accomplished doom! "Those thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost but the son of perdition." (John 17: 12.) "Wo to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! It had been good for that man if he had not been born!" (Mat. 26: 24.) Now, which will stand; the Word of Almighty God, or that of the feeble worm that squirms against it?

4. The profoundest depth reached by the progressive steps in this "other gospel," now holds the High and Holy One who inhabiteth eternity, to reverse Judas' doom or else lose his own self-respect or peace!!! What presumption did ever transcend this irreverence toward the Majesty of heaven?

The Englishman argues out an habeas corpus for Judas Iscariot, and pleads that the "Judge of all the earth" must yield it or lose his character! Then the American echoes call it the grandest thought that ever entered the mind of man! To my mind it is the most insane arrogance ever indulged; for this arrant argument is leveled against the throne of the Eternal and he "that sitteth thereon?" [He could no longer be "the blessed God" on that view.]

This is no occasion for "flattering words." The affront to God seems like that of "Zimri," before all God's people. This perverting theory reaches as the Pope the head of "the apostacy" for "infallibility." My heart has trembled over this as never before over the [illegible] presumption. This riding rough-shod over all the sanctions of God's moral government has built up "Babylon the Great."

Why own God's name or authority at all, if they intend to so usurp his prerogatives, "box the compass" in error arm, bend, and turn to every wind of the tempest.

"My ways, saith the Lord, are not your ways; nor my thoughts your thoughts; for as heaven is high above the earth, so are my ways above our ways." (Is. 55.)

Illustration: Abraham, in acting on Sarah's suggestion, only begat a family broil and a race of Ishmaelites. (Gen. 15.) Moses knocked the Egyptian dead, but it availed nothing but to humble himself. (Ex. 2: 12.) The apostles chose Matthias in Judas' place, but God had before that chosen St. Paul, and ignored their self-assumed authority to act for him. (Acts 1: 15, 26; Gal. 1: 15.) The bishop of Rome was taken to be the high priest of Christendom, but this tended to make up "the mother of harlots." This "mother church" and her daughters claim to constitute "the kingdom of God—the kingdom of Christ!" How monstrous! Yet, this "unpreached gospel" arrogates the right to speak as "an angel of light"—to loose the screws of God's government and so would unhinge heaven and earth.

It undoes 'death' as 'the wages of sin.' It echoes the serpent; 'Ye shall not surely die.' The end of those things, its says, is not death. Then, of course, 'The gift of God' (may not be) 'eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.' (Rom. 6.) 'The wicked,' (Judas, Cain & Co.,) are made 'as the righteous,' (Peter, Paul, & Co.)

If the English author and his American echoes would but quote the Word of the Lord on the point, then they would teach the faith which they now endeavor to destroy. Instead, they assume, inquire and argue till they undermine the whole temple of truth. With them there is no place for Phineas against the idolatrous fornicators of Peor. (Num. 25:7–18.) Nor for Elijah's execution of Baal's priests. (1 Ki. 18: 40.) Their fellowship is human, if I see correctly.

The assumed pious motive and super-extra good-will to men should be estimated in relation to their 'unpreached gospel.' As if they could better the glorious gospel of the blessed God. Would it not be more becoming in them to say that God has spoken of Judas and all the unjust, and then "speak as the oracles of God," and echo him?

This is all we would ask of them. Then, as I see, they would escape the error of the wicked—the snare of the adversary. Let all think on the darkness from which such a title—'The Unpreached Gospel'—could come! This hitherto unpreached gospel, like idol gods to Israel, has no authority—no element from on high that can save from the penalty of law which they fain would supersede or ignore.

Sanctification.

This is a thing we cannot have too much of provided we get it in the right way; but the history of the church is prolific of evidence of sanctifications through error that have sealed its devotees for destruction; these all claimed to be sanctified through a special unction of the Spirit of God, and to be possessed of peculiar powers that rendered them holy and past the power of evil in spite of the flesh, and, some claimed, the devil; 'perfect' (not in love but) in holiness as God himself, etc. In vain you appeal to such with the plain and obvious doctrine of the word of truth—that which they themselves have taught for many years and believed themselves in a salvable condition and have witnessed the power of the truths they taught in reclaiming sinners and sanctifying them and others, and have often claimed to possess the 'joy and peace that passeth all knowledge,' still they would now draw a line among the brethren in disregard of the truth, or by its perversion, thus tearing the fold and scattering the sheep. It is painful to have to say this to brethren I have loved and do still love so much; but my regard for the truth is paramount to all personal considerations.

This, I am sure, is a matter of no small importance, and it is time brethren should speak out. Some have done so, and nobly, too. This is the day to stand up for Jesus. Stand up for his word which sanctifieth, and let us rightly divide it, too; hold fast to its doctrines and glory in them and praise God for them, and pray always lest we enter into temptation, and we, after having preached to others, become castaways. To your Bibles! To your Bibles! Keep the lamps trimmed; be suspicious of those, if any, who ignore 'doctrines,' (except their hobby) but want emotional meetings through stereotyped experiences, short, sharp, and quick choruses of Watts, or other hymns or songs.

If ever there was a time when Christians should insist upon the Word it is now. Trim your lamps: then when attempts are made to pervert the truth to support a theory, you will be able to detect it at once. Recently a brother whom I dearly love, quoted as a clincher to his argument, 'by grace are ye saved,' evidently intimating that Paul has reference to this special blessing which they call sanctification. Well, could there be a more gross perversion? Read the context, Eph. ch. 2; and especially read v. 8, and see that this grace is: salvation through faith—the gift, favor or grace of God, which we are told is eternal life. Faith in what? Read to the end of v. 10. (Why not quote the whole text?) Then read ch. 26, which in the Diaglot reads, "So that having purified her in the bath of water he might sanctify her by the Word!" Oh! dear brethren, read Ephesians through. Study every word, and cease from error. Sanctify yourselves. Call solemn assemblies; but take your Bibles with you. Cease from man whose breath is in his nostrils. The Judge standeth at the door; gird up the loins of your mind with truth; let this sanctify you, and the Spirit will lead you unto all truth if you will let it. Do not take a part of the truth; that is the danger. Let it run and be glorified. Thank God for his Word!

W. K. EVERSON.

"Watchman, What of the Night?"

Is it a fact that God has appointed watchmen to take the oversight of this dark world? And as there are dangers to which the church is exposed, is it not the duty of watchmen to point them out, and give the alarm? And is it not the watchman's business to know the hour of the night we are in, and more especially when great and important events are to transpire in the morning, on which hangs the eternal future of the watchman, the church, and the world which is unreconciled to God?

Can it be that men to whom God has intrusted the care of the church, and has told them to be faithful, and has given his word, "Lo I am with you always, even to the end of the world," I say, can it be possible that watchmen have fallen asleep just as the eternal future is to be revealed, and the elements are to melt with fervent heat? Are watchmen giving meat in due season, when we see by the eye of faith that the angel has made ready to blow the awful blast which will end probation, and to which the precious dust of saints that have fallen since our God created man will answer, with brother Job, and come forth; when our judge will summon us to the bar of God, to be rewarded as our works shall be; I say again, can it be that watchmen are doing their duty when we know if there is anything in the signs which are being fulfilled before our eyes, that the morning is just to dawn when sin and wicked men are to be rooted out of the earth, when earth shall smile again, when they say so little about these things?

My heart cries out, Oh! hail happy day! My prayer is, God wake up the Watchmen! There is no time for sleeping; no time to seek the applause of man. All depends upon your faithfulness to God and man. The church is dying for want of food. They want meat right from God, not corrupted by man. It does seem to me that God demands by the influence of his Holy Spirit, immediate action, and now is the time to begin to be in earnest about the matter, for in a few short months, at most, the warfare will be ended, the victory won, the inheritance given to all of his waiting people. May it be our happy lot.

SETH GOODHUE.

"I have no Time."

For what? To search the Scriptures. But our Lord has enjoined it, and we should do it, that we may understand his attributes and character, and claims upon us, our nature, duties, and destiny. God has given them for this purpose.

But God gives your time and intends you should use it in his service. Duties may press upon us but this does not release us from the obligation to learn the word and will of God.

There are now many helps we can procure. Cruden's Concordance will help us to find almost any given passage in the Bible. It is very valuable to every critical Bible student. Then is an important help, of more value than ten times its cost to every Bible reader. It is the result of years of [illegible] study and thought. In this book are found over three hundred subjects in sections, each with an appropriate heading, and under it the leading chief plain texts, quoted in full, from Genesis to Revelation, with frequent quotations from others' versions; all without note or comment. With this book one can sit down and read, compare, contemplate, and examine any one subject by itself, and get more knowledge of the subject in one hour than the same mind could look out and bring together in a whole week. This not only saves time but gives time to devote to further study.

To illustrate: One man had been settled about the character and preexistence of the Son of God. A brother opened 'Berean's Casket,' turned to the sections on that point, and asked him to read the 90 or 100 direct Scriptures embodied together. This done, the subject was cleared up and at once settled. A minister did not believe there was a devil, nor any devils, [demons] except the spirits of wicked men; another minister opened 'Benean's Casket' and asked him to read God's record of the devil in the sixty passages brought together, and the thirty-five passages on 'devils.' This body of direct witnesses stood before him all at once, uttering their testimony in order. He confessed he had never noticed these Scriptures. He was cured in one hour.

Such is the case on many vital points when examined. Then the matter in the last hundred pages of this book is of great value, tracing prophecy and the history of its fulfillment, the history of the early translations of the Scriptures; statistics of their circulation; of nations, races, religions and heathen sects, of good and evil elements of this generation, the chronological tables, and other important matter.

All who buy this book will gain much information and save much time. Sold at the TIMES office. Price, cloth, $2.00; Morocco, $2.50.

BIBLE READER.

Our Rock.

'The Lord is my rock and my salvation,' said the Psalmist; and he let his case rest right there. No matter if the winds do blow; no matter if the storm does howl. If we are on the Rock all is well. Jesus says: 'Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, is like a man whose house is founded on a rock.' Like 'a house founded on a rock.' A good foundation is very desirable in all things. We desire to do business on a firm basis. We want all our earthly structures so well founded that there will be no danger of their falling or settling away, or become in any way injured for want of firmness of foundation. So the true Christian desires to know on what basis he stands. Christ is the rock on which the entire church is built. Christ is God's. The immutability of the eternal throne is the security of the church on earth. Here she rests, and lays all her burden on the mighty Helper, and feels secure. Every member of the body of Christ should understand that the everlasting Arms are his only support. 'Cursed is the man that trusteth in man,' said the Lord's prophet. How true his words!

'Trust in the Lord,' is the oft-repeated injunction of the Bible. The hills will be removed, the mountains will melt, the heavens will fall, 'but the word of the Lord endureth forever.' 'Thy promises, O Lord, are very sure.' What consolation does this thought afford to tried and care-worn pilgrims on their way to that glorious country where only purity is found. In the midst of storms, surrounded by waves in commotion, amid rocks and shoals where false lights are set to draw us from our true course, how sweet to know that there is a rock on which we may rest. The Christian, amid all the perils of life, may say:

The Lord is [illegible], my tower, my fort[illegible] [illegible] my way. Jesus is made [illegible]isdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. In him I find all I desire. I am founded on the Rock of Ages. Here I rest, and fling to the winds my perplexity, knowing that 'the foundation standeth sure, having this seal, the Lord knoweth them who are his.' Stand on the Rock, pilgrims. The kingdom is at home!

NUMEN LUMEN.

Misunderstood.

It seems that the Bible is particularly liable to be misunderstood. From the earliest years we have been more or less familiar with it, and have attached meanings to various passages, according to our early teachings, and to us the plain words continue to suggest old ideas, till something startles us and awakes us to open our eyes and see what the Word really does say, and to think what the saying really does mean. So, on reading cursorily a new version, that of the Bible Union for instance, we perceive little or no difference, the nearly similar words suggest the same familiar ideas; but, let our attention be aroused, and directed to some particular passage, with a view to see what it does in reality teach and then we perceive differences in versions, both in words and in meanings, which formerly were unnoticed; and a new meaning being found in the old passage it is to us a new Scripture, and we wonder we never saw it before.

Expository preaching and writing are too much neglected. Something to tickle itching ears seems in demand, so instead of reading in the Book, and giving the sense, and causing the people to understand the reading, we find fine words concerning fields and flowers, and sparkling streams, and bubbling brooks, and rolling rivers, and warbling birds, and gorgeous butterflies; which answer well to make palatable the necessary amount of "orthodoxy," which again answers to appease the conscience which wants some religion. So the Bible becomes as a sealed book, and when one tries to appeal from creeds to the law and testimony it is largely a failure, because to the hearer the Bible reads as he was taught in childhood and has always believed. We must remember this, and devote much time to cause the people to understand the reading.

An instance of this misunderstanding of a plain, familiar passage has come before me, and I have reason to think the mistaken view is wide-spread. I refer to Mat. 19: 13, 14; Mk. 10: 12, 13; Lk. 18: 14, 15,—"Suffer little children" etc. The mistaken idea is this: "Suffer little children in general and forbid them not, to come unto Christ; for of a portion of such is the kingdom of heaven composed." This is not at all the meaning of the Word. There were infants (Lk.) brought to Jesus; the disciples rebuked those who brought them (Mk.): but Jesus said: "Suffer the little children [that is, those being brought] and forbid them not to come unto me." Here is a command, positive: suffer, permit them; negative: forbid them not. Then he gives a reason why, "for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Here the chief misunderstanding takes place. "Of" is thought to be partitive, but it is not. "Of such" is the rendering of toiouton, the genitive (i. e., possessive) plural of toioutos—"such," "such-like," "this [illegible]." The meaning is exactly expressed [illegible] the ungrammatical form "such's": "such's is the kingdom of heaven," "such-like's is the kingdom," or we may use the "of," "of such is the kingdom," or, to prevent mistake, we may render "of" by "belonging to," "belonging to such is the kingdom," or we may change the construction of the sentence and render it as the Bible Union have done, "for to such belongs the kingdom of heaven." Notice there are no special characteristics of these children mentioned; they were only "little children;" yet it is affirmed that to them, and those like them, belongs the kingdom of God.

There are several theories respecting infants who die in infancy now current. One is "the cruel dogma of the man of sin," that unbaptized infants are lost. This notion is not confined to the Papal church, but may be found in most others among those who are superstitious.

Another is the Calvinistic doctrine: "Elect infants dying in infancy are regenerated and saved by Christ, through the Spirit; who worketh when, and where, and how he pleaseth." (Westmr. Con. 10: 3.) This is hardly less cruel than the Papal; it still sends the non-elect babes to the place of wo, to "gnash" their gums and "weep and wail;" but the cause is removed from those who failed to perform the Papal ceremony, to God himself, alone.

Another, and I think prevailing belief, is, that the children of believers are saved, and all others lost. This is held in the face of the Lord's own declaration and oath. (Ezk. 18: 1–3, 20), and is no better than the others; for who caused the children to be born of believers or unbelievers? Unless, indeed an early death is the procuring cause of their salvation.

The legs of the lame are not equal, but God's ways are; and there is no respect of persons with him.

A. Armour.

From F. R. Way, Summit, Penn.

The Times is all the Advent preaching I have, and I believe its doctrine to be the most reasonable and consistent with divine justice. I received the tracts which you sent, and I was surprised, yet pleased, to receive so many. I shall try to get my friends to read some of them, if I can overcome their prejudices. But many of them "care for none of these things." I have not read them all for I have little time to read except Sundays. But I have read "Think for Yourself," and I think it is an excellent tract. I wish all thoughtless persons would read it; but early prejudices are hard to overcome. As for myself, I am resolved to think for myself, and to search the Scriptures. One thing is certain, we have an eternity to gain or lose. I can not claim to be anything but a sinner yet I hope to appear on the right hand of God in the great day, for by grace we are saved. I should like to live where I could hear Advent preaching, but there is none within twenty miles of here. I went into Ohio last spring about two hundred miles because I heard there was an Advent church there, with the intention of working awhile and hear for myself. But I was disappointed in the place, and came back without making any inquiries. But I can read, and that is the next thing to hearing. I have read the Bible through by course, and some parts of it, a great many times over, and I think the Advent faith has more Scripture on its side than any other doctrine. I wish that the truth may abound more and more until all may come to a right knowledge of it, and feel that God is a God of love.

The Soul-Sleepers.

Several public journals, of late, have alluded to this new sect, which has recently made its appearance in Kentucky. We have lately seen several tracts, setting forth some of the tenets of their faith. It seems that they already have a weekly paper, published at Chicago, Ill., The Advent Christian Times, "Sustaining their views." They have, as yet, but one church in Kentucky, made up mainly of converts from other religious denominations. The pastor of this church, Rev. Mr. Turhune, was recently killed. He was hauling shingles to cover his church, when his horses took fright and ran away, the wagon running over his body.

From the tracts referred to, we can gather but a few articles of their creed. But these points are set forth with considerable force and a great deal of plausibility. It is destined, we think, to be far more popular than Universalism. So far as we can gather, the main article of their creed—whence their name—is this: The souls, both of the righteous and the wicked, sleep from the time of the death of the body until the second coming of Christ, or until the resurrection. Then the righteous shall awake to life everlasting, and the wicked shall be annihilated. They believe that the soul is material, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return"—that immortality is never predicated of man—that God "only hath immortality." (1 Tim. 6. 15, 16.) Mankind lost his natural life by sin, and this is restored only to the believer in regeneration; but the wicked, or unregenerated, utterly perish. But this life is not in the believer, but "in his (God's) Son;" and hence the believer even has no life "until Christ, who is our life, appears, and we appear with him in glory." "So that the believer does not come into possession of it until the Son of God appears, when, according to Christ the righteous enter into life eternal.' Mat. 15. 31-46.) "There are but two deaths spoken of in the word of God—the first and second death"—both of these are physical, or have respect to the body; the one takes place on earth; the other after the resurrection. "The first death is the penalty attached to the first transgression and the Adamic law. The "second death is the penalty that awaits all unpardoned sinners"—annihilation.

They utterly deny that the "penalty of sin is moral and spiritual death." "If," they say, "the penalty of sin is moral death—this is the same as to say, 'the wages of sin is sin; whereas 'the wages of sin is death.' The death threatened is not a death that never dies. Such would be as great an absurdity 'a life that never lives.' "

If the reader asks, what do they do with all those passages of Scripture which refer to future punishment of the ungodly, we answer, they are all made to refer to their punishment in this life, or to their second death, i.e., their utter destruction, or annihilation, after the resurrection. In one of these tracts, entitled "Everlasting Punishment; or Destruction vs. Torment," there are twelve arguments stated by Dr. Graves, Editor of the Baptist, of Memphis, Tenn., with his accustomed point and power, that are weighed in the balances and answered with a logic equally clear and forcible by the author.

It is well enough for all the lovers of truth and sound doctrine to be warned of an approaching and insidious enemy. The teachings of these tracts are very plausible, and very grateful to the unrenewed heart. If not as grateful to the human heart as Universalism, in its universal gift of salvation and heaven, at least to all alike, it at least takes away all fear of hell or any wrath to come, in the utter, final and universal annihilation of all the ungodly.—Kentucky Cor. of Herald and Presbyter.

Trash.

A New York writer makes a statement with reference to the "Dime Novel" nuisance, which should arouse all Christian hearts, and nerve all Christian hands to some counter work to overcome the impending danger. These silly stories are manufactured by the page, by second and third-rate scribblers, whose vocabulary of ponderous adjectives is unlimited as their girth of ideas is limited,—we say girth because that instrument more exactly measures the region of the brains in all this litter of authors,—and printed and published by houses of low repute. There is neither intellect nor affection in any of the productions of this stupid order of writers. The whole catalogue of certain unscrupulous publishers is stuff—mere stuff, and the meanest of stuff at that! No object is had in view in its preparation but to excite the lowest nature, and to pander to mammon and sin. But we quote:

I have been told by a prominent job printer that half his presses are running on this kind of work. While literature, generally, is dull, this style maintains its full rate of sale. It is evident that such reading must weaken and degrade the mind prodigiously, and indeed it is found that lovers of dime novels can read little else. By the same rule that strong drink evidently weakens the body, tales so exciting weaken the intellect. A gentleman of fine literary taste remarked that the youthful mind of the country is threatened with idiocy. "Had I," said he, "been fed on such trash while young I should have been imbecile." The effect of early reading for good or evil is beyond estimate. I know a man who, while a boy, was in a place where almost the only reading book he could get—next to the Bible—was Addison's Spectator. He read this many times and became imbued with its style and sentiments, which gave him an abiding culture and elevation. Suppose that instead of this he had read "Lantern Faced Bob," "Small-Pox Dave," "Fighting Nat," "Clumsy Foot," or "Long-Legged Joe." These names I have taken from the publisher's list, and they challenge admiration. The latter is making money, but it is at the expence of the mental vigor of the public. The sale of these tales never was greater than at present, and recently a flaming hand-bill has been sent to every post-master to attract attention.—Meth. Recorder.

The Independent Christian.

What we need in religion to-day is more independence of action, more individuality in thought. We do not need more organization, but more of the personality of manhood in Christian character. As in Athens it was "easier to find a god than a man," so in America it is easier to find a church than Christian.

The Chinese flag is a black dragon on a yellow field. This dragon is connected with Panism. It is said that a great dragon once helped the emperor to build a bridge; hence he has been photographed and is worshiped as the water god, Neptune, of the Chinese. Once a year it is said that the crabs, turtles, snails, and fish come to his temple to compete for grades of dragonship. The test is to jump a high wall, and as the turtles can not perform this religious ceremony alone, they make an alliance, and get over by clinging to the tails of the flying fish.

Many Christians are trying to get along in just this way, by clinging to some one else, and speaking and living according to what somebody thinks, or according to what everybody says. Instead of taking Christ as our example, and growing up toward his manhood, we "compare ourselves among ourselves," and hide behind each other. In society this yielding to the current of opinion is seen by a few straws on the surface of popular talk. How often we hear the expression, "It don't show," oftener than we hear, "Is it right?"—Union Advocate.

We suppose that all Editors have essentially the same experience. The Methodist Recorder says: one of the curious things about editing a religious newspaper is, that about four-fifths of the writers whose contributions have been declined, or even delayed, take personal offense at the editor. They write private reminders that less important and more lengthy articles than theirs have appeared, and so forth and so forth. Sometimes they stop the paper—(that is, their copy of it, not the whole enterprise!)—sometimes they depreciate publishing concerns generally. It is a pretty sure indication of a rejected communication to hear certain literarily ambitious persons criticise their church paper. But editors must continue to exercise their impartial judgment on all submitted articles; and this with a view to the interest, profit and pleasure of their regular readers, rather than to the feelings of voluntary writers. Editors should not feel under any special obligations to youth, to age, or to position; but always to the church's general good. Any other course would be to waste time and come short of duty. Brief, suggestive articles, if free from mere local or personal small-talk, are welcome, especially when writen by experienced Christians. And such persons are always reasonable.

Humor And Sarcasm—It is not everybody who knows where to joke, or when, or how; and whoever is ignorant of these conditions had better not joke at all. A gentleman never attempts to be humorous at the expense of people with whom he is but slightly acquainted. In fact, it is neither good manners nor wise policy to joke at anybody's expense; that is to say, to make anybody uncomfortable merly to raise a laugh. Old Æsop, who was doubtless the subject of many a gibe on account of his humped back, tells the story of his fable of "The Boys and the Frogs." What was jolly for the youngsters was death to the croakers. A jest may cut deeper than a curse. Some men are so constituted that they can not take a friendly joke in good part, and instead of repaying it in the same light coin will requite it with contumely and insult. Never banter one of this class, for he will brood over your badinage for a long time after you have forgotten it, and it is not prudent to incur any one's enmity for the sake of uttering a smart double entendre or a repartee. Ridicule, at best, is a perilous weapon. Satire, however, when leveled at social follies and political evils, is not only legitimate, but commendable. It has shamed down more abuses than were ever abolised by force of logic.

The Famishing Indian.—An aged Indian, half-naked and famished, wandered into one of our Western settlements, begging for food to keep him from starving. While eagerly devouring the bread bestowed by the hand of charity, a bright-colored ribbon, from which was suspended a small, dirty pouch, was seen around his neck. On being questioned, he said it was a charm, given him in his younger days; and opening it, displayed a faded, greasy paper, which he handed to the interrogator for inspection. It proved to be a regular discharge from the federal army, entitling him to a pension for life, and signed by General Washington himself.

Now, here was a name which would be honored almost anywhere, and which, if presented in the right place, would have insured him support and plenty for the remainder of his days: and yet he wandered about hungry, helpless, and forlorn, begging for charitable bread to keep him from famishing. What a picture of men with all the pomises of Jesus in their hands—and of Christains, too, with the charter of their inheritance in full possession—yet starving in the wilderness!—Sel.

Waiting.—Said a visitor at a country almshouse to a feeble, palsy-shaken old man—

"What are you doing, Wisby?"

"Waiting, sir."

"And for what?"

"For the appearance of the Lord."

"And what makes you wait for his appearing?"

"Because, sir, I expect great things then. He has promised a crown of righteousness to all that love his appearing."

Better have Wisby's hope than Victoria's sceptre, Lazarus' rags than Dives' purple. Better is poverty with piety, than riches with perdition.—Heber.

Under the head of "Ice in the Pulpit," a pastor who admits that there is sometimes coldness in the prayer, dullness in the sermon, and a general chilliness in the whole service asks who put it there, and thus answers his own qustion: "You, Deacon Jones, you put it there! At least you have done more to put it there than any one else in the parish. Your whole course for the last three years has constantly tended to put out the fire in your pastor's heart, and turn him into an iceberg. You have neglected or been slow to pay a portion of his salary, and fill his mind with the cares of this world; you have neglected the prayer meeting, and have come late to church, and left your pastor to bear the whole burben of souls, and by your example have encouraged others to do the same, while you have given yourself up to successful money getting. If your pastor is frost-bound, you can thaw him out; support and sympathy will melt away the ice. Try it."

The rats once assembled in a large cellar to devise some mechod of safety in getting the bait from a steel trap which lay near, having seen numbers of their friends and relatives snatched from them by its merciless jaws. After many long speeches, and proposals of many elaborate but fruitless plans, a happy wit, standing erect, said; "It is my opinion that if with one paw we keep down the spring we can safely take the food from the trap with the other." All the rats loudly squealed assent. Then they were startled by a faint voice, and a poor rat with only three legs, limping into the ring, stood up to speak; "My friend, I have tried the method you propose and you see the result. Now let me suggest a plan to escape the trap: Let it alone!"

The Biblical Recorder, is responsible for the following report on the money market: The scarcity of money is astonishing, when funds for missions, or even for a pastor's salary, are wanted: but the poorest man or woman in any congregation can make out to——— see the circus.

One of the Wesleys thus described those theologians who maintain that the election of some does not imply the reprobation of others:

He did not do the ruthless deed
Some have more mildly raved;
God did not damn them, but decreed
They never should be saved.

By friendship you mean greatest love, the greatest usefulness, the most open comunication, the noblest sufferings, the severest truth, the heartiest counsel, and the greatest union of minds of which brave men and women are capable.

You cannot teach a child to take care of himself unless you will let him try to take care of himself. He will make mistakes; and out of these mistakes comes his wisdom.

No author ever drew a character, consistent to human nature, but he was forced to ascribe to it many inconsistencies.

"Distress is an excellent schoolmistress," said an ancient philosopher, "but no man likes to put himself under her tuition."

The spirit of a person's life is ever shedding some power, just as a flower is steadily bestowing some fragrance upon the air.

Advent Christian Times.

CHICAGO, TUESDAY, December 3, 1872.

IN the article "Our Rock" read, 'The Kingdom is at hand,' instead of 'at home,' and you will get the writer's idea.

"SHE needs simply the earnest religious breath of her early reformers," says a traveler of Switzerland. Evidently he knows the root-meaning of spirit.

"THE Celestial Transition" is the newest gloze put upon death by orthodoxy. And if death is "the celestial transition," we would like to know what the resurrection will be? Ah! But little account is made of that.

DR. Holmes spoke more wisely than he knew when he said: "Our brains are seventy year clocks. The angel of life winds them up once for all, then closes the case, and gives the key into the hands of the angel of resurrection."

A correspondent of The Christian Intelligencer says: "I would be glad to see a religious journal that a non-professor could distinguish from a secular one." This writer is only one of many who find it hard to detect any very essential difference between a secular and a religious newspaper. The pride and purpose of some of our contemporaries, while professing devotion to Christian truth and Christian morality, is evidently to be 'critical in polemics, profound in philosophy, and posted in literature and art.' There is scarcely a flavor of religion about some papers that claim to be published in its interests; and those who read them confess that they are anything but inspiring and helpful to their religious nurture.

Two of the most prominent "religious" papers in the country are used to advertise the new fashions of the day; and the persistency of these advertisements at a heavy expense shows that the advertising pays. The readers of those papers are the fashion-mongers' customers. No doubt the millennium is close by, and this is one way those religious teachers take to enforce the apostolic precepts about 'modest apparel.'

"AND if fallen angels can never be saved, how is evil to be destroyed from the universe?" asks the Christian Advocate. Suppose they and all other sinners were "annihilated," what then? Would there not then be a clean universe? The purpose of God in the manifestation of his Son will not be subverted. The devil and all his varied work will be destroyed and eventually every sentient being will be in perfect harmony with the great Creator.

REV. John Hemphill, of San Francisco, recently discoursed from Heb. 1:14—"ministering spirits," concluding with the following most sensible sentence:

> It involves an absurdity to suppose that departed spirits come to reveal to us what God in his wisdom has seen fit to conceal. We don't want departed spirits to foretell our calamities, for that would make life intolerable. We don't want them to foretell our success, for that would be to rob us of half our joys. We don't want them to talk nonsense; there is plenty of that in the world without the aid of spirits.

Mr. Hemphill also remarked:

> Then we are sure they (spirits of the dead) do not make revelations regarding the future world; and we base our statement on this important fact—that of all those raised from the dead by the power of Christ or through the instrumentality of his apostles not one of them speaks one word regarding the world of spirits. Oh, what secrets could the brother of Martha and Mary have told, who had been dead four days! Yet he is silent. Now, if these resurrected men are silent regarding the future, what proof have we that disembodied spirits return to earth and speak?

But the fact cited is more pregnant with suggestion than Mr. Hemphill seems to perceive. It evidently does not occur to him that those resurrected men had been dead, and hence had no more experience to relate than a man awaking from sound sleep. They told nothing because they had nothing to tell.

VULTURES gorging with carrion, and reeking with the corruption of their vile food, are but a faint illustration of the vileness of the business of the divorce lawyer, who seeks to cultivate and encourage immorality, mining the very foundations of home, family ties, and social virtue to fill his purse. One of this class wishes us to advertise that he will obtain divorces, "legal everywhere, desertion, general misconduct &c., sufficient cause, no publicity; advice free.' The letter and proposed advertisement are lithographed in fine style, showing that this agent of the devil has a flourishing business, and can afford to pay well for his advertising. What a comment upon the condition of society!

THE Christian Herald announces that it will be suspended after a few weeks. We think it is high time it was suspended. When the successor of the old Herald of Gospel Liberty falls so low as to advertise and commend to its readers lottery gambling it should die. If Nebraska needs an orphan asylum, it had better suffer the need of it, than found one upon corruption of public morals. "The appeal is made on grounds of humanity" for men to gamble for "a chance to win a fortune in a public legal drawing," (polite name for lottery,) and at least one religious journal advises its readers to yield temptation and do evil that good may come.

THE Chicago Journal remarks:

> The visionaries say that capital punishment does not restrain people from murdering one another. We contend that it does. Statistics show that fewer murders occur in Germany, in proportion to population, than in any other civilized country. The reason of this is that when a man kills a fellow-being over there he gets his head cut off with a large double-edged sword. And the courts there do not exhaust their vitality in trying to keep him from his deserved fate, either.

And yet orthodox theologians—"the merciless doctors," as one has styled them, jealous of their favorite dogma of eternal sin and wo, declare that "death is no punishment." But "facts are stubborn things."

ZION'S HERALD improves upon the lesson of the Boston fire in an editorial upon "the imperishable." It says nothing of imperishable souls in imperishable flames and misery. Indeed the occasion was inapt for that topic. Twenty-eight souls, it is said, perished in the flames. The "unquenchable fire" devoured or killed all who fell a prey to its fury. God in nature and God in revelation agree; there is no contradiction between them. In both books we learn that fire devours its victims when it is uncontrollable or "unquenchable." The only way they can be saved is by putting the fire out. Hence one of the strongest possible figures of literal destruction is that of "a fire that shall not be quenched"—cannot be put out until its prey is utterly consumed.

> Now this [eternal misery] is not a question of sentimentalism at all, but of a stern fact in the just government of God. He has anticipated every contingency, and met it in the gospel. The road to heaven for sinners is open and clearly marked out. The result of walking in any other road is distinctly declared—a result so fearful that one would expect every man to put forth his utmost endeavors to save his soul. To die without Christ is to voluntarily accept the threatened and well known penalty of sin. Nor is there any injustice in its infliction.—Christian Advocate.

The last sentence in the above paragraph is clearly a non sequiter. Justice does not lie in the knowledge of the penalty affixed to any law, but in the proportion between penalty and offence. Formerly death was the penalty of sheep stealing (in England). We are now horrified at the thought that such a penalty was ever inflicted for such an offence This question is one, to some extent at least of sentimentalism. If the highest, best, and purest sentiments of human nature are outraged by the thought of eternal conscious suffering as the penalty of sin, we are fully justified in doubting the dogma. The best and purest of its advocates are afflicted by it, some of them in untold measure. If the truth were only known, both fact and sentiment are against the fearful doctrine.

HORACE GREELEY died last Friday evening at Tarrytown, N. Y. In brief, he was killed by overwork in the late political campaign added to the cares and anxieties of watching by the sick-bed of his wife. Mr. Greeley was one of the greatest men of his time. As an editor he was unequaled in general ability, tact, vigor and fluency in expression. If he had been elected to the office he so recently sought, undoubtedly he would not have lived to assume it. His disease was inflammation of the brain occasioned by over-taxation and privation of sleep. Like many others, he is more like to be fairly appreciated after his death than during his life. In religious sentiment he was a Universalist.

BR. HASTINGS' LOSSES.

Since our last issue we hear that Br. Hastings has met with still another loss, in the destruction of Rand & Avery's printing establishment. He had made arrangements with this firm to issue the Christian, but is once more subjected to loss and cruel disappointment. From the pen of another we learn that the Repository lies in ashes—beds, bedding, furniture, clothing, type, presses, bookplates, books, tracts and pamphlets, a large number; valuable manuscript, choice facts and selections, affording proof on important subjects connected with the Bible, the best results of his studious life, aided by no ordinary talent, are now no more. His all is burnt up, excepting a portion of his private library. These are a few items connected with the sad calamity. Some of the things he prized most, money cannot restore; but he informed us that it would take not less than twenty-five thousand dollars to replace what was burnt up. We heartily endorse the following remarks from a letter by Br Tilley of Washington:

> Those who know Br. H. and his noble companion best, are aware how entirely they have, like Muller, of England, lived a "life of trust," and how wonderfully God has provided the means for the work they have undertaken in his name; but perhaps all are not aware how Sr. H., after being raised up from what was thought must be her death-bed—in direct answer to prayer and laying on of hands, and as she firmly believed, for the special work in the destitute South to which, leaving family and home, she immediately devoted herself—when she saw the absolute famine, both physical and spiritual, that prevailed in that desolate region, at once returned North, sold her remaining property—the little house which, as her husband said, she had earned many times over—and devoted the proceeds to the work in which she was engaged, thus literally "giving all for Christ." As we are not called upon, then, to relieve physical suffering, as in the case of the Chicago fire, let us, who believe the time for doing up our work for our Master is so short, give of our substance to supply a still greater want, "a famine of the word of God."
> I would suggest to any one who approves of this suggestion, that he or she be not satisfied with forwarding an individual contribution, but start a subscription, and give all an opportunity to aid in the good work. We did so last Sunday here in Washington, and though we are, as yet, but a "feeble folk," we raised a respectable sum on the spot, which will probably be considerably increased. To any one who may not have the money to give, I would suggest that he or she can aid just as effectually by taking a copy of the Christian and starting out to obtain a list of subscribers, which, with the beautiful map of Palestine offered as a premium, ought not to be a difficult matter, among members of all denominations, seeing it is, as its name imports, entirely unsectarian, and aims merely to win and prepare subjects for the kingdom.

SOUND AND SENSE.

The Standard thinks the Scriptures may "sound" one way, and have a very different "sense" from what the "sound" would naturally indicate. It more than hints that we care more for sound than sense. Well, we confess to a weakness for the natural sound of Scripture; and, if, as the Standard says, we have "a way of stringing texts together so as to make them sound harmoniously," we cannot say we are sorry for it. We remember the time when we could not do this. "String" which way we would, the harmony was not there, but instead were contradiction and discord.

The occasion for the Standard's remarks upon sound and sense was a few citations and remarks showing that the ultimate fate of "the wicked" is sufficient proof that they are not raised immortal. The Standard requotes with remarks, as follows:

> For instance, David said of certain wicked ones, "Into smoke shall they consume away." How easy to believe, then, that the bodies of the wicked shall consume into smoke in the day of judgment. Very easy, no doubt; but then, was David speaking of that day? and is his language to be taken literally? A few verses before this (Ps. 37:17) we read: "For the arms of the wicked shall be broken." Does this mean that all the wicked shall have their arms broken before they are burned up? And even if the wicked are to be literally consumed into smoke, do we not read that "the smoke of their torment ascendeth for ever and ever?" May they not, then, after all, be immortal?

It would seem from this that some have a faculty of splitting texts apart, and placing them where God has not placed them, thus educing a sense, quite contrary to the sound of the inspired language. Suppose instead of an evident figure (favoring our own views however,) in a preceding verse, the Standard had simply cited the text in question. We quoted only its culmination, for brevity's sake. The whole verse reads: "But the wicked [not "certain wicked ones," but the wicked as a class, opposed to "the meek" and "the righteous." The wicked, he says] shall perish; and the enemies of the Lord [not certain ones of them] shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume: into smoke shall they consume away." Now so the argument is concerned we care not a fig whether the language be figurative or literal: the ultimate sense is the same in either case. Both sound and sense are to the effect that the wicked shall perishes "as" the "fat of lambs" perishes when placed in fire.

And will the reader please look over the reference to the ascending smoke of torment again? We believe it reads that the wicked may "be literally consumed into smoke," and yet "after all be immortal!" How a man can be literally turned into smoke, and still exist as a man, we confess we cannot conceive. He may be an eternal smoke in that condition, but not an immortal man. We await light.

Next comes this neat bit of sophistry:

> Again: "These shall utterly perish in their own corruption." That sounds very much as if the theory of THE TIMES might be correct. But then we read in Deut. 4:26: Ye shall soon utterly perish from off the land whereunto ye go over Jordon to possess it." Yet more than three thousand years have passed, and the Jews have not "utterly perished" not even from that land. There is some doubt whether "utterly perish" means just what the TIMES would have it mean. At all events, if the Jews have utterly perished, how are they to perish utterly again in the last day? Can they utterly perish twice?

It certainly cannot be denied that the words—"These shall utterly perish in their own corruption" "sound very much as if THE TIMES might be correct." And now suppose instead of reading Deut. 4:16, we read the rest of the same verse. "And these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of things they understand not, and shall utterly perish in their own corruption." So we see it was the Standard and not Peter that said they should perish as the Jews out of Palestine: while Peter himself said they should perish "as ....beasts....taken and destroyed." Any one can see the force of this figure.

If the reader will take Deut. 4:26 and 27, or rather the whole chapter together, he will speedily see that the expression "utterly destroy" refers to the independent national existence of the Jews; for v. 27 says expressly a remnant should be scattered among the heathen nations. If the independent nationality of the Jews is not utterly destroyed or annihilated, what terms, pray, would express the facts in the case. But the Standard adds:

> "He that sows to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption." Does corruption mean annihilation? When Peter says, "Having escaped from the corruption that is in the world through lust," does he mean, having escaped the annihilation that is in the world through lust? And when he says, "they themselves are the servants of corruption," does he mean that they are servants of annihilation?

Now the Standard did not mean to misrepresent us, it is too fair for that kind of work. It was only a little hasty in assuming the sense we might hold of the word "corruption." We never dreamed that corruption means annihilation. But we are sure that whatever is corruptible is in its nature on the road to destruction, and may be eventually annihilated to all intents and purposes. Hence when we read of the final rewards, that sinners will "reap corruption," we find nothing in the way of believing that they "shall utterly perish in their own corruption." Mixing the ideas of moral and physical corruption, and then giving the sound a sense we never asserted of it was a queer mistake of the Standard.

> "He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Undoubtedly. But that this refers to the final judgment, is not so easily proved. We seriously doubt this application of it. And if it does, we are told that the wicked shall depart into "everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."

We respect all honest doubt: but as unquenchable fire and everlasting fire are synonymous terms, we fail to see just how the Standard can (with its view) get either of them this side of the judgment. Is there more than one eternal fire? If so, how many hells are there to be? And if an unquenchable fire could go out in Jerusalem, and an eternal fire expire in Sodom, why should any one conclude that these expressions have either the sound or sense of immortality for sinners condemned to everlasting fire? In every other connection unquenchable or everlasting fire destroys. But where sinners are cast into it, we have clear proof of their immortality! Is this "carefulness in the matter of interpretation?"

But says the Standard:

> So our good friend of THE TIMES must excuse us if we fail to jump at conclusions from the mere sound of certain favorite texts of his. We have learned to be careful in the matter of interpretation. We cannot be captivated by this style of literalism. After men have utterly perished once, we do not see exactly the how or the why of raising them up merely that they may utterly perish again.

The objection that it cannot "see the how or the why of raising [the wicked] up merely that they may utterly perish again" is second-hand at best. Does it by any means follow that because the wicked die the second death they are raised merely that they may die? Did it never occur to the Standard that possibly God might raise them for some other purpose or purposes in the economy of his universe, and still utterly destroy them in the end?

Hoping the Standard will hereafter "string" its texts to their contexts, and keep in mind its own published rule that "the best way to do with a Bible class is to "explain the figurative by the literal," we pass to its strictures upon our remarks concerning Paul's experience related in 2 Cor. 12, which we will take up in another article.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

THE last Maine Conference was held at Hollis, with a result truly glorious. Some ten souls turned to the Lord, confessing and forsaking their sins——Brs. Kent and Patten have just closed a meeting at Hamburg, Iowa. Three were baptized and four added to the church, which was greatly encouraged and edified by the labors of these brethren.

MY JOURNAL.

WEDNESDAY, Nov. 27. I have been looking over some of our books today, and among them I find an important essay on woman's position in the church. I feel a great pleasure in calling attention to this new work, by James Herman Whitmore, entitled, "Women in the church," or, "Do the Scriptures recognize women as eligible to all the positions in the church that they accord to men?" The essay was called forth by the fact, that at the session of the New York Advent Christian Conference, in Lockport, March, 1872, the question was mooted—"Ought women to be ordained as ministers of the gospel?" It was discussed, but not decided. And by request, Mrs E. S. Jennings, and J. H. Whitmore, each prepared essays on the subject, in which both sides of the question were fully discussed, in June, 1872, at the conference in Springwater. The essay of Br. W. is published at the earnest request of nearly all who heard it. Br. W. does not take a position against woman's rights in the common view, or against her speaking in public, but denies that she is eligible to all the rights or offices that are given to men, by the authority of the Bible. He has made his points, and made them clearly, and backed them up by the word of God. I do not wonder that the whole audience arose at the close in enthusiastic approval. This pamphlet is now ready, and it should have wide circulation among all thinkers and Bible readers. Let each one examine this question fully, and take their position on the side of sympathy with women in all her Scriptural rights, and help her in the discharge of her public duties. I repeat, that all interested in the subject, will be greatly edified in reading the essay. Get one and read it, and I am sure you will get more and give to r friends. Let the essay have a e circulation.

Western General Ministerial Advent Chris- onference.

ᴇʀᴇᴀs, the various Advent Christian Con- s in the West can work more effectually upbuilding of the Redeemer's cause, by g harmoniously; and,

. I. This conference shall be styled the n General Ministerial Advent Christian rence.

. II. It shall be composed of ministers, ted by the different Advent Christian Con- s in the West.

. III. Each conference shall be entitled to delegates.

. IV. Its officers shall be a President, vice ent, and Secretary, whose duty it shall be the work ordinarily belonging to those

. V. It shall meet annually while time may ue; provided that a special meeting shall ed by its officers, at the solicitation of any Conferences; and provided, further, that such special meeting shall be preceded by a three months notice through our publishing organ, setting forth the object of said meeting.

Art. VI. The officers shall be elected at each Annual Meeting.

Art. VII. It shall be the duty of this conference to consult together concerning the best methods of advancing the cause of Christ in the different conferences, and to send out an address to the churches within their bounds, making such recommendations as may be judged advisable, after thorough deliberation.

Art. VIII. The officers of the Conference shall take pains to learn the number of ministers in each State Conference, at each regular meeting, and re[illegible] through our weekly paper: Also the number of churches added each year to each conference, that all may thus learn of the prosperity of the cause in our general report.

Art. IX. This constitution shall be subject to amendment by a vote of three-fourths of the members present at any regular meeting.

J. V. Himes was then elected President; Wm. McCullock vice President; and William Sheldon, Secretary. A special session was held in Buchaman, Mich. Nov. 28, 1868, but little or no business was transacted.

The second Annual meeting was held in Brodhead, Wis., Jan. 28, 1869. The officers elected were, J. V. Himes, President; F. Burr, vice President; W. Sheldon, Secretary; Wm. L. Himes, Corresponding Secretary.

The third meeting was held in Chicago, December 10, 1870. No officers were elected, as no delegates were present to attend to this business. The meeting for 1872, is not yet appointed. But as the constitution requires an Annual Meeting it may be appointed in due time.

The interest taken in this conference has not been general or hearty. Last year the Secretary advised its dissolution, for this and other reasons. And with the increase of our State Conference it has been thought too much of a burden to keep it up yearly, beside, all the State and quarterly Conferences. Should this conference be continued, it will no doubt change the Constitution so as to meet once in two years, or less frequently, instead of annually. It is important to have such a body, and to keep up its regular sessions. And unless there is punctuality, and general attendance, the organization virtually dies and ceases to be of use. One of the difficulties in the way of a general conference in the West is, the largeness of the territory, and the consequent expense of travel. Hold it where we will, the majority of the members will be subject to an expense of from fifty to seventy-five or one hundred dollars, and yet, it may be worth more than this sacrifice to get together and transact business that may build up the cause of truth, and bind the body in closer ties in its great work.

There are now some fifteen Conferences, that may be regarded as interested and united in the Western field. But a small portion of these have as yet, been represented in any session of any general conference in the West. But it is to be hoped, with the increasing interest and growth of the cause, there will in future be a larger and more satisfactory attendance.

AT HOME.

– – – Califonia is on the high road to successful silk manufacture.

– – – The usual November display of meteors has not occurred this year.

– – – The loss by the Boston fire was $60,000,000. Sixty acres were burned over.

– – – Mr. Jay Gould has been sued by the Erie Railway for the sum of ten millions (nearly), which he is accused of stealing from that corporation.

– – – The United States navy seems to be a good deal of a humbug. One vessel which originally cost $325,000, has cost $750,000 for repairs! Out of fifty ironclads, forty are condemned.

– – – Henry Ward Beecher says: "If Darwin is right in thinking that men ascended from monads by gradual evolution, then it is very certain that some men came up by the way of the musquito, the flea and the biting fly, and that their ancestral traits still linger in the blood."

– – – The Mercury, of San Jose, Cal., of a recent date, says that the advent of Goldsmith Maid and Lucy in the Golden State "is a moral calamity, the evils of which it will take years to counteract. It has turned the heads of the people, and they are fast becoming a community of horse-jockeys."

– – – Four boys near Yonkers, N. Y., exploded about 500 pounds of nitro-glycerine stored in a pit for safe keeping, 'for fun.' Two of the boys were torn in pieces, the third mortally injured, while the fourth escaped with life. The explosion was heard and felt for ten miles, and every pane of glass in a circle of several miles was shattered.

– – – Statistics of fires, recently compiled, show that $76,000,000 were lost through isolated conflagrations in the United States within the space of two years, the great Chicago and Boston conflagrations not being considered. Twelve per cent. of these fires owed their origin to accidents with kerosene. Eighteen per cent. of the fires occurring in New York in a single year were due to the [illegible]

– – – While England has escaped the horse disease, a new malady has broken out there which is much more revolting. It is reported from various sections that it is impossible to preserve game any longer. the hares, deer, pheasants and other game dying by hundreds of a strange sickness their livers and other internal organs being filled with worms. In a country where so much account is made of game as in England, the affliction is a very serious one.

– – – According to the officer in charge of the Signal Service at Boston, the wind during the fire became cyclonic. Beyond the influence of the heat, its velocity was about five or nine miles an hour, but on every side of the fire, there were in-draughts of air moving from sixteen to thirty-five miles an hour, which met and formed huge spirals of wind, flames, and firebrands. He declares the meteors or balls of fire said to have been seen during the conflagration to have been only the reflection of the flames on the plumage of ducks flying overhead.

– – – There may be some truth in the talk of the aristocracy in the churches, judging from the result of a recent sale of sittings at St. Bartholomew's Protestant Episcopal church at the corner of Madison Avenue and Forty-second street, New York. There are 200 pews in the church, and the valuation is $312,900—the lowest being valued at $300. At the sales the premiums for choice ranged from $10 to $1,500, the latter price being paid by Vanderbilt for the first choice, who paid also for the second choice $1,100. Nineteen pews sold for $32,960.

– – – By a recent 'corner' in the New York stock market, the price of the Northwestern Railway stock, worth, say eighty cents on the dollar, was forced up to 200. The successful gamblers made from six to seven millions of dollars. That such operations in stocks and grain are sapping the foundations of American honor, is undeniable; but we would like proof of the truth of the Inter-Ocean's assertion that the conviction is fast gaining ground that the gamblers in grain, stocks and securities must be subjected to the same ostracism that marks the treatment of their brethren of the green cloth, of the cards, and the dice-box.

– – – According to a lengthy review which appeared recently in the New York World, Shakerism is a thing of the past—or very soon will be, except in a modified form. Founded upon the supposition that they were guided and instructed directly from heaven, modern spiritism, and its loud assertions of spiritual communication and direction, has rather overshadowed the more modest claims of the Shakers, and has set them to thinking that if "out the world" the same privilege is enjoyed, their societies may not be so necessary after all. Then, too, the question of marriage is receiving a degree of attention quite incompatible with celibacy. From Mount Morris Community alone a dozen couples are about to withdraw from the establishment, and it is thought their example will inspire the youthful members of other communities to do the same.

– – – The idea that the fire in Boston was owing to any peculiar, standing delinquency here, as compared with what can be found in other cities, is utterly absurd. All cities are pretty much alike in this respect, although some of our citizens felicitated themselves quite to the contrary when they heard of the Chicago fire. Humble as they are now, they know that before another week or another day, the same disastrous visitation may come down upon any other city. In fact, it is well not to expect too much. There never will be a total suppression of fires. But they can, undoubtedly, be greatly limited in number and in destructiveness, as compared with the case in our American cities hitherto. To that end we must bend our best thoughts and most persevering efforts; but anything like exageration or panic in the matter will do more harm than good.—Boston Journal.

—It would seem as though the world might learn the lesson of the providence of the age —the vanity or uncertainty of all things earthly. We think a healthy "panic" in this direction—a distrust of temporal things—would be a public blessing.

– – – Here is something for all surgeons to read and admire. It comes to us, like gold and great pears, from California. In 1869, Luther Corey, in Santa Cruz county, had his arm broken in two places above the elbow. One of the fractures knitted and healed; the other, owing to a splint of the bone being between the ends of the fracture, did not. After suffering great pain, Mr. Corey went to San Francisco, and the surgeons there opened the flesh on his arm, and cut the callous part from off the ends of the bones, pressing the ends together and binding the arm in splints. So they remained for eighteen months, but still the bones did not knit, and the muscles of the arm became shriveled up and useless. Then Mr. Corey applied to Dr. Lane of San Francisco, who forthwith performed the prettiest little job of surgical workmanship conceiveable. He opened the arm, sprung out the end of the bones and, cutting off the callous parts, he beveled the ends of the bones, so that each would lap a little over the other. He then riveted them together with a silver wire, and set the arm in a case. The bone then knit and healed, leaving the arm two inches shorter. Mr. Corey now uses his arm at his work, and, with the limb useful again, is once more a tip-top sawyer.

– – – There appears to be really something 'out of joint,' not only with our own planet, but with the whole system of which we are a fraction, and which may be more or less connected with the startling disturbances recently observed by the spectroscope both in the sun and its photosphere. The past two years has been one unbroken series of catastrophes in the shape of earthquakes, tidal waves, fires, inundations, storms, epidemics, and othe inflictions. Each day, almost, the electric messenger comes fraught with the news of some disaster caused by the elements. The latest addition to this long list is the fearful storm which has swept the Baltic, the North Sea, and their contiguous coasts. Stralsand, the historical seaport town, which has braved the gale and the wave since it was a member of the Hanseatic League; the adjacent island of Rugen, a favorite summer resort, and the whole Pomeranian and Danish sea board, have had a narrow escape from being swallowed up by the hungry sea. One small island in the North Sea is reported to have been entirely submerged and all its inhabitants drowned. In the Baltic, Prasto, a Zeeland town, has been half swept away by the fury of the gale and the flood. Scarcely less disastrous and widespread is the destruction of life and property caused by the inundation of the river Po, in Italy, of which the London Times cable dispatch gives a truly heartrending description. —Inter-Ocean.

– – – The baptism of fire, says the New York correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, seems to be needful of a new birth of our American cities. Chicago and Boston have suffered what no doubt New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, St. Louis, and other leading cities have yet to suffer. I trust I am in error; but I cannot help believing that Gotham is doomed to semi-destruction; that, ere long, our heaviest business portion will be laid in ashes. Our fathers and our mothers used to talk of the Great Fire of Dec. 16, 1835, until it seemed something appalling. But when we learned that only the First Ward, east of Broadway and below Wall street, including less than 700 buildings, was destroyed, causing a loss of not much more than $18,000,000, we refused to be startled by such an insignificant array of facts. We forgot that the city yet contained hardly 250,000 inhabitants, and that $1,000,000 then represented as much as $10,000,000 does to-day. Thus we see that the disaster of thirty-seven years ago was as severe to the Metropolis as was your grand illumination thirteen months since. When our next great fire comes, it will be liable to sweep away $400,000,000 or $500,000,000 worth of property; and then we shall rebuild as Chicago has done, and as Boston will do; so that the probability of still another repetition of the fiery catastrophe will be materially diminished. The district bounded by Canal street, the bay, and the two rivers, represents such manifold attractions to the Demon of Flame that I am surprised he has not, long since, cast into it his infernal torches. He is biding his time, unquestionably. Some intensely cold night, when the greater part of the city is fast asleep, he will awake us with a crimson flash, the roar of flame, the sound of tumbling walls, and the terrific din of a mighty city fated to fiery sacrifice. The conflagration of 1835 will, I fear, be repeated before the end of the century, and our solidest structures be swept away like a smoke wreath in a blast of wind.

ABROAD.

– – – The English feel sore over the San Juan award. Well, there would have been a worse sore if there had been a war about it and the Alabama claims.

– – – Germany is all ready to concentrate troops in France in event of a new revolution there. She don't mean to interfere in political affairs, but is determined to hold full security for 'that little account.'

– – – The merchant navy of the world in 1872, according to figures published by the Statistical Bureau of Brussels, consists of 61,062 vessels, measuring 18,214,535 tons. This is a considerable falling off from the figures for 1870.

– – – The great floods in China are attributed to the gradual upheaval of the northeastern part of the country. Geologists have long suspected that some such upheaval was taking place, and now consider it demonstrated.

– – – The cholera epidemic in the Bengal Presidency, India, is at an end. It has destroyed during the year one hundred thousand of the native population, and about eight hundred of the European troops.

– – – More of the English than of the Irish are now emigrating to America. In October nearly ten thousand Englishmen crossed the Atlantic to its western shore, while less than two thousand Irish made the voyage.

– – – Germany says, frankly, that she opposes the emigration of her sons to this country not from any unfriendliness toward the United States, but because the European sky looks threatening, and she wants to keep them at home, in readiness for use as 'food for powder' in the expected 'general European war.'

– – – The German government having ordered German vessel owners to raise their rates of passage to America, for emigrants, the English companies straightway reduced their own. One can go from Liverpool to Boston for $19, or to New York for $14—food, such as it is, included. Cheap enough for 3,000 miles travel.

– – – The Norwegian ship Sesostris was wrecked in the North Sea and 140 of her crew perished. A dispatch from Stralsand reports that eighty vessels were totally wrecked in the late gale. The town was considerably damaged by the inundation. The fishermen on the islands of Seingst, Dars, and Hiddensoe lost all their fishing smacks ane apparatus. Their houses and contents were greatly damaged by the water. Nearly all the cattle on the islands were drowned. Wells were flooded from the sea, and the inhabitantd are suffering for want of fresh water, food, and shelter. The government has dispatched a steamer laden with supplies for their relief. The island of Rugenalso felt the disaster heavily. Many of its fishing boats have been destroyed, and the fields near the coast-line are flooded. The loss of life, both on the islands and mainland, is very great. The small island of Boston was entirely submerged, and all its inhabitants were drowned. The storm was very disastrous throughout Denmark and on the coast. The wind blew a hurricane, and rain and snow fell incessantly. Streams overflowed their banks and inundated the country for miles. Half of the town of Prasto, in the island of Zeeland, on the Baltic, was laid waste by the force of the wind.

– – – That the new war ship, Devastation, is a success, so far as she has been tried, is now admitted. The ponderous monster, which squats upon the astonished waters with a dead weight of 10,000 tons, takes any ordinary waves with stolid indifference, whether she receives them end on, or upon bow, beam, or quarter. The prodigious hill of foam which her stem piles up when under weigh, washes, as was expected, clean over her forward deck, and she is often submerged aft; but her massive mid section rides quietly enough, and those on board her when anchored in the rolling tide-way at Spithead, say that she was "steadier than the houses ashore." She turns with great readiness, and in a small circle, and her speed, as proved in six trials along the measured mile, is not only equal to the promise of her designers, but it exceeds expectation. The mighty engines driving this island of iron with an indicated power of 6,000 horses, with seventy-seven revolutions to the minute, got fifteen knots and a half out of the ship, and her mean rate at full steam is thirteen knots and three-quarters. Here, therefore, is a craft which is vulnerable only to a very few guns, has the swiftness of a mail-packet, and the handiness—thanks to her twin screws—of a tug, while she could utilize these qualities to hurl upon the sides of an opponent the awful force of all her 10,000 tons moving with the velocity of a spear. On board this remarkable man of war, there are no less than thirty-four distinct and separate engines, and, indeed, the value which she represents is as serious as her fighting capacity. What remains to be learned is the behavior of the ugly giant in a real Biscay gale; and whether or no the cul-de-sac which she carries aft will or will not prove a mistake in a heavy following sea. With stability assured to 55 deg., with no top-gear to set her over, and with decks which can be hermetically sealed, she would be safe enough; but whenever she does roll, or pitch, or scud, the rivets and fittings in her huge body will be shrewdly tried. Except in the Russian monitor Peter the Great, nothing floating could resist or even challenge such a vessel, at once so strong and swift. The torpedo, no doubt, may yet be so developed as to make the Devastation, and all her terrible sisters, impotent against a defended coast. On the high seas at present she has no superior, though we suppose the day will come when even this amazing construction will be as obsolete as the three-deckers of Nelson.—London Daily Telegraph.

VANDYKE—Died on Wednesday morning, Oct. 27, 1872, Johnnie F. Vandyke, son of Dr. J. C. and Wilhelmina Vandyke, aged 9 years, 10 months, and 7 days.

Who can imagine the sorrow that has befallen the parental heart at the loss of the loved son, their only son? Can not our condolence, sorrow-stricken parents, quiet your anguish? Our heartfelt sympathy is yours. Look you up to the one that said "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

You will miss your dearest Johnnie
  When you bend your knees to pray;
You will miss his cheerful, smiling face,
  His kind and gentle way.
He is not dead, but sleepeth;
  You have laid him down to rest
With his little white hands clasped
  Upon his peaceful breast.

Dear brethren of the Northern Illinois Conference. How many of you mean to attend the Annual Conference at New Rutland, commencing Dec. 11? The place of holding the next camp meeting, and other matters of vital importance to the cause will there be considered and decided. We hope to see a full representation.

Let every church send her full proportion of delegates. Let every minister be present. Come! Let us rally for God and his precious cause. The times are ominous. What we do must be done quickly.

Every church is expected to send a written report, and every minister to report either in person or by letter. Address the Secretary at New Rutland.

Two of the boys were torn in pieces, the third mortally injured, while the fourth escaped with life. The explosion was heard and felt for ten miles, and every pane of glass in a circle of several miles was shattered.

* * * Statistics of fires, recently compiled, show that $76,000,000 were lost through isolated conflagrations in the United States within the space of two years, the great Chicago and Boston conflagrations not being considered. Twelve per cent. of these fires owed their origin to accidents with kerosene. Eighteen per cent. of the fires occurring in New York in a single year were due to the same cause.

* * * While England has escaped the horse disease, a new malady has broken out there which is much more revolting. It is reported from various sections that it is impossible to preserve game any longer, the hares, deer, pheasants and other game dying by hundreds of a strange sickness their livers and other internal organs being filled with worms. In a country where so much account is made of game as in England, the affliction is a very serious one.

* * * According to the officer in charge of the Signal Service at Boston, the wind during the fire became cyclonic. Beyond the influence of the heat, its velocity was about five or nine miles an hour, but on every side of the fire, there were in-draughts of air moving from sixteen to thirty-five miles an hour, which met and formed huge spirals of wind, flames, and firebrands. He declares the meteors or balls of fire said to have been seen during the conflagration to have been only the reflection of the flames on the plumage of ducks flying overhead.

* * * There may be some truth in the talk of the aristocracy in the churches, judging from the result of a recent sale of sittings at St. Bartholemew's Protestant Episcopal church at the corner of Madison Avenue and Forty-second street, New York. There are 200 pews in the church, and the valuation is $312,900—the lowest being valued at $300. At the sales the premiums for choice ranged from $10 to $1,500, the latter price being paid by Vanderbilt for the first choice, who paid also for the second choice $1,100. Nineteen pews sold for $32,960.

* * * By a recent 'corner' in the New York stock market, the price of the Northwestern Railway stock, worth, say eighty cents on the dollar, was forced up to 200. The successful gamblers made from six to seven millions of dollars. That such operations in stocks and grain are sapping the foundations of American honor, is undeniable; but we would like proof of the truth of the Inter-Ocean's assertion that the conviction is fast gaining ground that the gamblers in grain, stocks and securities must be subjected to the same ostracism that marks the treatment of their brethren of the green cloth, of the cards, and the dice-box.

* * * According to a lengthy review which appeared recently in the New York World, Shakerism is a thing of the past—or very soon will be, except in a modified form. Founded upon the supposition that they were guided and instructed directly from heaven, modern spiritism, and its loud assertions of spiritual communication and direction, has rather overshadowed the more modest claims of the Shakers, and has set them to thinking that if "out the world" the same privilege is enjoyed, their societies may not be so necessary after all. Then, too, the question of marriage is receiving a degree of attention quite incompatible with celibacy. From Mount Morris Community alone a dozen couples are about to withdraw from the establishment, and it is thought their example will inspire the youthful members of other communities to do the same.

* * * The idea that the fire in Boston was owing to any peculiar, standing delinquency here, as compared with what can be found in other cities, is utterly absurd. All cities are pretty much alike in this respect, although some of our citizens felicitated themselves quite to the contrary when they heard of the Chicago fire. Humble as they are now, they know that before another week or another day, the same disastrous visitation may come down upon any other city. In fact, it is well not to expect too much. There never will be a total suppression of fires. But they can, undoubtedly, be greatly limited in number and in destructiveness, as compared with the case in our American cities hitherto. To that end we must bend our best thoughts and most persevering efforts; but anything like exageration or panic in the matter will do more harm than good.—Boston Journal.

* * * Here is something for all surgeons to read and admire. It comes to us, like gold and great pears, from California. In 1869, Luther Corey, in Santa Cruz county, had his arm broken in two places above the elbow. One of the fractures knitted and healed; the other, owing to a splint of the bone being between the ends of the fracture, did not. After suffering great pain, Mr. Corey went to San Francisco, and the surgeons there opened the flesh on his arm, and cut the callous part from off the ends of the bones, pressing the ends together and binding the arm in splints. So they remained for eighteen months, but still the bones did not knit, and the muscles of the arm became shriveled up and useless. Then Mr. Corey applied to Dr. Lane of San Francisco, who forthwith performed the prettiest little job of surgical workmanship conceiveable. He opened the arm, sprung out the end of the bones and, cutting off the callous parts, he beveled the ends of the bones, so that each would lap a little over the other. He then riveted them together with a silver wire, and set the arm in a case. The bone then knit and healed, leaving the arm two inches shorter. Mr. Corey now uses his arm at his work, and, with the limb useful again, is once more a tip-top sawyer.

* * * There appears to be really something 'out of joint,' not only with our own planet, but with the whole system of which we are a fraction, and which may be more or less connected with the startling disturbances recently observed by the spectroscope both in the sun and its photosphere. The past two years has been one unbroken series of catastrophes in the shape of earthquakes, tidal waves, fires, inundations, storms, epidemics, and other inflictions. Each day, almost, the electric messenger comes fraught with the news of some disaster caused by the elements. The latest addition to this long list is the fearful storm which has swept the Baltic, the North Sea, and their contiguous coasts. Stralsand, the historical seaport town, which has braved the gale and the wave since it was a member of the Hanseatic League; the adjacent island of Rugen, a favorite summer resort, and the whole Pomeranian and Danish sea board, have had a narrow escape from being swallowed up by the hungry sea. One small island in the North Sea is reported to have been entirely submerged and all its inhabitants drowned. In the Baltic, Prasto, a Zealand town, has been half swept away by the fury of the gale and the flood. Scarcely less disastrous and wide-spread is the destruction of life and property caused by the inundation of the river Po, in Italy, of which the London Times cable dispatch gives a truly heartrending description. —Inter-Ocean.

* * * The baptism of fire, says the New York correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, seems to be needful of a new birth of our American cities. Chicago and Boston have suffered what no doubt New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, St. Louis, and other leading cities have yet to suffer. I trust I am in error; but I cannot help believing that Gotham is doomed to semi-destruction; that, ere long, our heaviest business portion will be laid in ashes. Our fathers and our mothers used to talk of the Great Fire of Dec. 16, 1835, until it seemed something appalling. But when we learned that only the First Ward, east of Broadway and below Wall street, including less than 700 buildings, was destroyed, causing a loss of not much more than $18,000,000, we refused to be startled by such an insignificant array of facts. We forgot that the city yet contained hardly 250,000 inhabitants, and that $1,000,000 then represented as much as $10,000,000 does to-day. Thus we see that the disaster of thirty-seven years ago was as severe to the Metropolis as was your grand illumination thirteen months since. When our next great fire comes, it will be liable to sweep away $400,000,000 or $500,000,000 worth of property; and then we shall rebuild as Chicago has done, and as Boston will do; so that the probability of still another repetition of the fiery catastrophe will be materially diminished. The district bounded by Canal street, the bay, and the two rivers, represents such manifold attractions to the Demon of Flame that I am surprised he has not, long since, cast into it his infernal torches. He is biding his time, unquestionably. Some intensely cold night, when the greater part of the city is fast asleep, he will awake us with a crimson flash, the roar of flame, the sound of tumbling walls, and the terrific din of a mighty city fated to fiery sacrifice. The conflagration of 1835 will, I fear, be repeated before the end of the century, and our solidest structures be swept away like a smoke wreath in a blast of wind.

ABROAD.

* * * The English feel sore over the San Juan award. Well, there would have been a worse sore if there had been a war about it and the Alabama claims.

* * * Germany is all ready to concentrate troops in France in event of a new revolution there. She don't mean to interfere in political affairs, but is determined to hold full security for 'that little account.'

* * * The merchant navy of the world in 1872, according to figures published by the Statistical Bureau of Brussels, consists of 61,062 vessels, measuring 18,214,535 tons. This is a considerable falling off from the figures for 1870.

* * * The great floods in China are attributed to the gradual upheaval of the northeastern part of the country. Geologists have long suspected that some such upheaval was taking place, and now consider it demonstrated.

* * * The cholera epidemic in the Bengal Presidency, India, is at an end. It has destroyed during the year one hundred thousand of the native population, and about eight hundred of the European troops.

* * * More of the English than of the Irish are now emigrating to America. In October nearly ten thousand Englishmen crossed the Atlantic to its western shore, while less than two thousand Irish made the voyage.

* * * Germany says, frankly, that she opposes the emigration of her sons to this country not from any unfriendliness toward the United States, but because the European sky looks threatening, and she wants to keep them at home, in readiness for use as 'food for powder' in the expected 'general European war.'

* * * The German government having ordered German vessel owners to raise their rates of passage to America, for emigrants, the English companies straightway reduced their own. One can go from Liverpool to Boston for $19, or to New York for $14—food, such as it is, included. Cheap enough for 3,000 miles travel.

* * * The Norwegian ship Sesostris was wrecked in the North Sea and 140 of her crew perished. A dispatch from Stralsand reports that eighty vessels were totally wrecked in the late gale. The town was considerably damaged by the inundation. The fishermen on the islands of Seingst, Dars, and Hiddensoe lost all their fishing smacks and apparatus. Their houses and contents were greatly damaged by the water. Nearly all the cattle on the islands were drowned. Wells were flooded from the sea, and the inhabitants are suffering for want of fresh water, food, and shelter. The government has dispatched a steamer laden with supplies for their relief. The island of Rugen also felt the disaster heavily. Many of its fishing boats have been destroyed, and the fields near the coast-line are flooded. The loss of life, both on the islands and mainland, is very great. The small island of Bostoa was entirely submerged, and all its inhabitants were drowned. The storm was very disastrous throughout Denmark and on the coast. The wind blew a hurricane, and rain and snow fell incessantly. Streams overflowed their banks and inundated the country for miles. Half of the town of Prasto, in the island of Zealand, on the Baltic, was laid waste by the force of the wind.

* * * That the new war ship, Devastation, is a success, so far as she has been tried, is now admitted. The ponderous monster, which squats upon the astonished waters with a dead weight of 10,000 tons, takes any ordinary waves with stolid indifference, whether she receives them end on, or upon bow, beam, or quarter. The prodigious hill of foam which her stem piles up when under weigh, washes, as was expected, clean over her forward deck, and she is often submerged aft; but her massive mid section rides quietly enough, and those on board her when anchored in the rolling tide-way at Spithead, say that she was "steadier than the houses ashore." She turns with great readiness, and in a small circle, and her speed, as proved in six trials along the measured mile, is not only equal to the promise of her designers, but it exceeds expectation. The mighty engines driving this island of iron with an indicated power of 6,000 horses, with seventy-seven revolutions to the minute, got fifteen knots and a half out of the ship, and her mean rate at full steam is thirteen knots and three-quarters. Here, therefore, is a craft which is vulnerable only to a very few guns, has the swiftness of a mail-packet, and the handiness—thanks to her twin screws—of a tug, while she could utilize these qualities to hurl upon the sides of an opponent the awful force of all her 10,000 tons moving with the velocity of a spear. On board this remarkable man of war, there are no less than thirty-four distinct and separate engines, and, indeed, the value which she represents is as serious as her fighting capacity. What remains to be learned is the behavior of the ugly giant in a real Biscay gale; and whether or no the cul-de-sac which she carries aft will or will not prove a mistake in a heavy following sea. With stability assured to 55 deg., with no top-gear to set her over, and with decks which can be hermetically sealed, she would be safe enough; but whenever she does roll, or pitch, or scud, the rivets and fittings in her huge body will be shrewdly tried. Except in the Russian monitor Peter the Great, nothing floating could resist or even challenge such a vessel, at once so strong and swift. The torpedo, no doubt, may yet be so developed as to make the Devastation, and all her terrible sisters, impotent against a defended coast. On the high seas at present she has no superior, though we suppose the day will come when even this amazing construction will be as obsolete as the three-deckers of Nelson.—London Daily Telegraph.

Obituary.

VANDYKE—Died on Wednesday morning, Oct. 27, 1872, Johnnie F. Vandyke, son of Dr. J. C. and Wilhelmina Vandyke, aged 9 years, 10 months, and 7 days.

Who can imagine the sorrow that has befallen the parental heart at the loss of the loved son, their only son? Can not our condolence, sorrow-stricken parents, quiet your anguish? Our heartfelt sympathy is yours. Look you up to the one that said "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

You will miss your dearest Johnnie
When you bend your knees to pray;
You will miss his cheerful, smiling face,
His kind and gentle way.
He is not dead, but sleepeth;
You have laid him down to rest
With his little white hands clasped
Upon his peaceful breast.

A good opening in Eastern Michigan for a young minister can be had, to supply three churches, and preach in other places as the Lord opens the door. Who will respond soon? For particulars address

Or W. C. Hicks, Caro, Michigan.

Notice.

The church of Arena being in a great measure destitute of preaching in consequence of my protracted sickness, would be glad of a call from any of the preaching brethren that could make it convenient so to do. Arena is on the Milwaukee and Prairie du Chien railroad, about 25 or 30 miles west of Madison. Any preachers on their way to or from Iowa, could give us a call.

Illinois.

Dear brethren of the Northern Illinois Conference. How many of you mean to attend the Annual Conference at New Rutland, commencing Dec. 11? The place of holding the next camp meeting, and other matters of vital importance to the cause will there be considered and decided. We hope to see a full representation.

Let every church send her full proportion of delegates. Let every minister be present. Come! Let us rally for God and his precious cause. The times are ominous. What we do must be done quickly.

Every church is expected to send a written report, and every minister to report either in person or by letter. Address the Secretary at New Rutland.

N. W. SPENCER, Pres't.

your friends. Let the essay have a wide circulation.

In the evening I went to Stanley Hall, on Lake Street, and heard Br. Preston, who preached on the "old paths," and "the rest," that we have in "walking in them." The household was fed with good food. Br. Preston is one of the growing men, and God is with him. He is laboring in the Southern part of Michigan, and prospering in his work. We have need of more such men.

Stanley Hall is located on Lake St., some two miles from the bridge, on the West side. Already the audiences are respectably large. The Hall is a very pleasant one to speak in, and there is a homelike freedom of feeling there. Those who go once want to go again.

THURSDAY, Nov. 28. National Thanksgiving. The sin of ancient Israel was ingratitude. "My people," said God, "have forgotten me." "I have raised up children, but they are rebelled against me." The American people have their "fast," and Thanksgiving days. This is good, so far, but there are only a few that observe them. The masses are given up to pleasure and wickedness.

I have gathered some facts that may be of interest in regard to the history of our associated action in the West. The first general Conference was held at Buchanan, Mich., in December, 1864, with delegates from Ohio, Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin. It organized our Western Association, and adjourned to the next summer, but never convened again. In 1868 the following call appeared in the Voice of the West:

A GENERAL MINISTERIAL CONFERENCE IN THE GREAT WEST.

We desire the attention of the Advent Christian Ministers, of the various Western States, on a matter of no little importance.

If we are not teaching cunningly devised fables in announcing the immediate coming of the Messiah to reign on the earth, we need to engage more vigorously and harmoniously in the great proclamation.

That we may consult together, and devise means conducive to this end, we take the responsibility to appoint and call a general conference of ministers to meet in DeKalb, Ill., in connection with the campmeeting to be held there, the first week in September. As there is not time for the various conferences to select delegates (which should have been done, if this call had been made at an earlier date) we invite all Advent Christian ministers in good standing in the various conferences to come.

We invite you to come from Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, New York and Ontario.

Let every church help their minister to come! Provide him with the necessary means. It will do him good and you too. Let us act for God, and for our coming King, and act while we may

J. V. HIMES.
WM. SHELDON.

FIRST SESSION

The conference met at DeKalb, Ill., September, 5, 1868, and was called to order by Eld. J. V. Himes, when Wm. Sheldon was appointed Secretary.

Brethren were present from Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, Indiana and New York. Wm. Sheldon, D. S. Clark and J. V. Himes were appointed a committee to prepare a constitution. They reported the following which was adopted:

CONSTITUTION of the Western General Ministerial Advent Christian Conference.

WHEREAS, the various Advent Christian Conferences in the West can work more effectually in the upbuilding of the Redeemer's cause, by laboring harmoniously; and,

WHEREAS, the establishment of a general Ministerial Conference, to be composed of ministers of various conferences of the West, CONSTITUTING AN ADVISORY BODY is an important step towards this desired result; therefore we have deemed it expedient to organize such a Conference with the following constitution.

ART. I. This conference shall be styled the Western General Ministerial Advent Christian Conference.

ART. II. It shall be composed of ministers, appointed by the different Advent Christian Conferences in the West.

ART. III. Each conference shall be entitled to three delegates.

ART. IV. Its officers shall be a President, vice President, and Secretary, whose duty it shall be to do the work ordinarily belonging to those offices.

ART. V. It shall meet annually while time may continue; provided that a special meeting shall be called by its officers, at the solicitation of any two Conferences; and provided, further, that such special meeting shall be preceded by a three months notice through our publishing organ, setting forth the object of said meeting.

ART. VI. The officers shall be elected at each Annual Meeting.

ART. VII. It shall be the duty of this conference to consult together concerning the best methods of advancing the cause of Christ in the different conferences, and to send out an address to the churches within their bounds, making such recommendations as may be judged advisable, after thorough deliberation.

ART. VIII. The officers of the Conference shall take pains to learn the number of ministers in each State Conference, at each regular meeting, and report through our weekly paper: Also the number of churches added each year to each conference, that all may thus learn of the prosperity of the cause in our general report.

ART. IX. The constitution shall be subject to amendment by a vote of three-fourths of the members present at any regular meeting.

J. V. Himes was then elected President; Wm. McCulloch vice President; and William Sheldon, Secretary. A special session was held in Buchaman, Mich. Nov. 23, 1868, but little or no business was transacted.

The second Annual meeting was held in Brodhead, Wis., Jan. 28, 1869. The officers elected were, J. V. Himes, President; F. Burr, vice President; W. Sheldon, Secretary; Wm. L. Himes, Corresponding Secretary.

The third meeting was held in Chicago, December 10, 1870. No officers were elected, as no delegates were present to attend to this business. The meeting for 1872, is not yet appointed. But as the constitution requires an Annual Meeting it may be appointed in due time.

The interest taken in this conference has not been general or hearty. Last year the Secretary advised its dissolution, for this and other reasons. And with the increase of our State Conference it has been thought too much of a burden to keep it up yearly, beside, all the State and quarterly Conferences. Should this conference be continued, it will no doubt change the Constitution so as to meet once in two years, or less frequently, instead of annually. It is important to have such a body, and to keep up its regular sessions. And unless there is punctuality, and general attendance, the organization virtually dies and ceases to be of use. One of the difficulties in the way of a general conference in the West is, the largeness of the territory, and the consequent expense of travel. Hold it where we will, the majority of the members will be subject to an expense of from fifty to seventy-five or one hundred dollars, and yet, it may be worth more than this sacrifice to get together and transact business that may build up the cause of truth, and bind the body in closer ties in its great work.

There are now some fifteen Conferences, that may be regarded as interested and united in the Western field. But a small portion of these have as yet, been represented in any session of any general conference in the West. But it is to be hoped, with the increasing interest and growth of the cause, there will in future be a larger and more satisfactory attendance.

JOSHUA V. HIMES.

" " " The baptism of fire, says the New York correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, seems to be needful of a new birth of our American cities. Chicago and Boston have suffered what no doubt New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, St. Louis, and other leading cities have yet to suffer. I trust I am in error; but I cannot help believing that Gotham is doomed to semi-destruction; that, ere long, our heaviest business portion will be laid in ashes. Our fathers and our mothers used to talk of the Great Fire of Dec. 16, 1835, until it seemed something appalling. But when we learned that only the First Ward, east of Broadway and below Wall street, including less than 700 buildings, was destroyed, causing a loss of not much more than $18,000,000, we refused to be startled by such an insignificant array of facts. We forgot that the city yet contained hardly 250,000 inhabitants, and that $1,000,000 then represented as much as $10,000,000 does to-day. Thus we see that the disaster of thirty-seven years ago was as severe to the Metropolis as was your grand illumination thirteen months since. When our next great fire comes, it will be liable to sweep away $400,000,000 or $500,000,000 worth of property; and then we shall rebuild as Chicago has done, and as Boston will do; so that the probability of still another repetition of the fiery catastrophe will be materially diminished. The district bounded by Canal street, the bay, and the two rivers, represents such manifold attractions to the Demon of Flame that I am surprised he has not, long since, cast into it his infernal torches. He is biding his time, unquestionably. Some intensely cold night, when the greater part of the city is fast asleep, he will awake us with a crimson flash, the roar of flame, the sound of tumbling walls, and the terrific din of a mighty city fated to fiery sacrifice. The conflagration of 1835 will, I fear, be repeated before the end of the century, and our solidest structures be swept away like a smoke wreath in a blast of wind.

ABROAD.

" " " The English feel sore over the San Juan award. Well, there would have been a worse sore if there had been a war about it and the Alabama claims.

" " " Germany is all ready to concentrate troops in France in event of a new revolution there. She don't mean to interfere in political affairs, but is determined to hold full security for 'that little account.'

" " " The merchant navy of the world in 1872, according to figures published by the Statistical Bureau of Brussels, consists of 61,062 vessels, measuring 18,214,535 tons. This is a considerable falling off from the figures for 1870.

" " " The great floods in China are attributed to the gradual upheaval of the northeastern part of the country. Geologists have long suspected that some such upheaval was taking place, and now consider it demonstrated.

" " " The cholera epidemic in the Bengal Presidency, India, is at an end. It has destroyed during the year one hundred thousand of the native population, and about eight hundred of the European troops.

" " " More of the English than of the Irish are now emigrating to America. In October nearly ten thousand Englishmen crossed the Atlantic to its western shore, while less than two thousand Irish made the voyage.

" " " Germany says, frankly, that she opposes the emigration of her sons to this country not from any unfriendliness toward the United States, but because the European sky looks threatening, and she wants to keep them at home, in readiness for use as 'food for powder' in the expected 'general European war.'

" " " The German government having ordered German vessel owners to raise their rates of passage to America, for emigrants, the English companies straightway reduced their own. One can go from Liverpool to Boston for $19, or to New York for $14—food, such as it is, included. Cheap enough for 3,000 miles travel.

" " " The Norwegian ship Sesostris was wrecked in the North Sea and 140 of her crew perished. A dispatch from Stralsand reports that eighty vessels were totally wrecked in the late gale. The town was considerably damaged by the inundation. The fishermen on the islands of Seingst, Dars, and Hiddensoe lost all their fishing smacks and apparatus. Their houses and contents were greatly damaged by the water. Nearly all the cattle on the islands were drowned. Wells were flooded from the sea, and the inhabitants are suffering for want of fresh water, food, and shelter. The government has dispatched a steamer laden with supplies for their relief. The island of Rugenaloe felt the disaster heavily. Many of its fishing boats have been destroyed, and the fields near the coast line are flooded. The loss of life, both on the islands and mainland, is very great. The small island of Bostoa was entirely submerged, and all its inhabitants were drowned. The storm was very disastrous throughout Denmark and on the coast. The wind blew a hurricane, and rain and snow fell incessantly. Streams overflowed their banks and inundated the country for miles. Half of the town of Prasto, in the island of Zeeland, on the Baltic, was laid waste by the force of the wind.

" " " That the new war ship, Devastation, is a success, so far as she has been tried, is now admitted. The ponderous monster, which squats upon the astonished waters with a dead weight of 10,000 tons, takes any ordinary waves with stolid indifference, whether she receives them end on, or upon bow, beam, or quarter. The prodigious hill of foam which her stem piles up when under weigh, washes, as was expected, clean over her forward deck, and she is often submerged aft; but her massive mid section rides quietly enough, and those on board her when anchored in the rolling tide-way at Spithead, say that she was "steadier than the houses ashore." She turns with great readiness, and in a small circle, and her speed, as proved in six trials along the measured mile, is not only equal to the promise of her designers, but it exceeds expectation. The mighty engines driving this island of iron with an indicated power of 6,600 horses, with seventy-seven revolutions to the minute, got fifteen knots and a half out of the ship, and her mean rate at full steam is thirteen knots and three-quarters. Here, therefore, is a craft which is vulnerable only to a very few guns, has the swiftness of a mail-packet, and the handiness—thanks to her twin screws—of a tug, while she could utilize these qualities to hurl upon the sides of an opponent the awful force of all her 10,000 tons moving with the velocity of a spear. On board this remarkable man of war, there are no less than thirty-four distinct and separate engines, and, indeed, the value which she represents is as serious as her fighting capacity. What remains to be learned is the behavior of the ugly giant in a real Biscay gale; and whether or no the cul-de-sac which she carries aft will or will not prove a mistake in a heavy following sea. With stability assured to 55 deg., with no top-gear to set her over, and with decks which can be hermetically sealed, she would be safe enough; but whenever she does roll, or pitch, or scud, the rivets and fittings in her huge body will be shrewdly tried. Except in the Russian monitor Peter the Great, nothing floating could resist or even challenge such a vessel, at once so strong and swift. The torpedo, no doubt, may yet be so developed as to make the Devastation, and all her terrible sisters, impotent against a defended coast. On the high seas at present she has no superior, though we suppose the day will come when even this amazing construction will be as obsolete as the three-deckers of Nelson.—London Daily Telegraph.

A good opening in Eastern Michigan for a young minister can be had, to supply three churches, and preach in other places as the Lord opens the door. Who will respond soon? For particulars address

John M. Snook, Jackson, Mich.,
Or W. C. Hicks, Caro, Michigan.

Notice.

The church of Arena being in a great measure destitute of preaching in consequence of my protracted sickness, would be glad of a call from any of the preaching brethren that could make it convenient so to do. Arena is on the Milwaukee and Prairie du Chien railroad, about 25 or 30 miles west of Madison. Any preachers on their way to or from Iowa, could give us a call.

Illinois.

Dear brethren of the Northern Illinois Conference. How many of you mean to attend the Annual Conference at New Rutland, commencing Dec. 11? The place of holding the next camp meeting, and other matters of vital importance to the cause will there be considered and decided. We hope to see a full representation.

Let every church send her full proportion of delegates. Let every minister be present. Come! Let us rally for God and his precious cause. The times are ominous. What we do must be done quickly.

Every church is expected to send a written report, and every minister to report either in person or by letter. Address the Secretary at New Rutland.

Parlor Games.

It may be well to concede that a game which is dangerous elsewhere is not wholly innocent in the parlor. many fathers and mothers flatter themselves that cards and billiards, not to mention other games, are innocent within the home circle. Never dreaming that a taste for those bewitching games in haunts of dissipation may be created and nurtured at the hearthstone, they encourage them at home by both precept and example.

A friend was in the city of B., and a near relative, who was a merchant, invited him to dine with him at a restaurant. While waiting for their order to be filled, our friend's relative manifested so much agitation and distress as to lead to an inquiry into the reason of it, whereupon his relative burst into tears.

"I fear," said he, after becoming self-possessed, "that Arthur is utterly ruined. He has a perfect passion for gambling."

"I am not surprised," answered our friend; "you will remember what I told you."

"Yes; and you were right, and I was wrong. But it is too late now."

This wealthy merchant had been wont to play cards with his children in the parlor. Beginning with them when quite young, he and his wife spent many of the long winter evenings playing cards. Our friend had been there and seen it, and had condemned the practice. Again and again he had warned the indulgent parents against nurturing a love for card-playing in their sons, that might prove a snare by and by in the place of vicious resort. The parents replied: "Just the way to keep them out of such places. Provide them amusements at home, and they will not go abroad for them. Your puritanic notions would drive many a boy into mischief, just to gratify a desire for innocent games which is not gratified at home."

But a few years had elapsed, and Arthur was twenty-one years of age, and a gambler. The father had satisfied himself that it was even as a brother merchant had told him. While the father did not dream that his son was a guest at public gaming boards, this merchant assured him that it was even so. Scarcely believing that it was possible, he resolved to ascertain; he had observed that his son left the desk, where he kept the books for the store, about such a time each day, and was absent an hour or more. He recalled, also, that he had scarcely been at home an evening of late, and frequently was out until nearly midnight. An apple-girl came into his office just before the hour he had observed his son to leave the store, and he called her attention to the young man at the desk.

"If you will go out upon the opposite side of the street," said he, "and watch that young man when he leaves the store, and tell me where he goes, I will give you half a crown."

In less than an hour the girl returned to assure the merchant that she could "show him where the gentleman was." The father, trembling with emotion, followed her to a street near by, noted for its gambling hells, and, going directly to a suspicious tenement, and pointing up the stairs, she said, "He went up there."

The father rushed up the stairs, and, opening the door, at the head of it what a spectacle appalled his sight! There sat his son, with a group of professional gamblers, fascinated with the game for money, as a few years before he had been fascinated by it in the parlor for pleasure. The father saw the connection between the places and the sports, as if the hand of the recording angel had drawn it. He was well nigh overcome. The great mistake of his life flashed upon his view to oppress and torment him. An "innocent pleasure" had grown into a hideous crime. What he did for the enjoyment of his son had ruined him forever.

He related all the foregoing circumstances to our friend, seeking neither to justify himself nor "innocent pleasure" but confessing his error, and owning that games which are vicious in places of public resort cannot be wholly innocent in the parlor.—Band of Hope Review, Sel. by M. A. T.

Correspondence.

From Our English Correspondent.

We have just concluded a week's service at Pulham, a country place about twelve miles from Dorchester and ten miles from the nearest town. During this time we have completed an experience of the hard lot of the Dorsetshire laborer, whose poverty is not only proverbial but sternly real. The average wages of a farm laborer here is about $2.50 a week, without board or lodging, and out of this he has to provide food, clothing, house, fuel and education for himself, wife and children, for prices ranging nearly as high as in America. The marvel is how they get from January to December. Sometimes a household will number eight persons, and even more, so that the way in which they subsist is a problem hard to solve. No one can blame them for striking for more money, because their present pay does not ever provide even fullness of bread—a keen appetite and a pinched stomach being the possession of more than a sprinkling of these industrious men. And then the manhood of these persons is literally crushed out. If the 'squire has a little daughter of five or six years of age, patriarchal old men have to cringe and abase themselves in the presence of this "infant," simply because she is of the "gentry."

But these oppressed and needy ones are hungering for the Bread of Life. We have preached to them of Christ, and they invite us to "come again." They are ready to step out for Christ, confessing him in baptism. To God be the glory!

They have a very urgent need here of a chapel. They can get people—all they require is a place. All who wish to help their "auxen poor" brethren may send to you.

Three weeks ago I sent you an article on the society of Jesus, which explained its principles as found in its own vade mecums. I have the pleasure this week of forwarding the final paper on "Jesuit History and Principles." It is the opening of a most wretched and godless excrescence of which, if God should rid the world, every Christian would have to approve his justice and wisdom in the act.

JESUIT HISTORY AND PRINCIPLES.

Fearfully lax, loathsome, and lamentable are the doctrines taught by Jesuit leaders, as published in their own books. A glance at some of them will explain many of their dark deeds of the past, and account for much of which we read and hear at the present. Conspicuous is the doctrine of Probability which teaches that so long as there is one Jesuit author in favor of any course of action, that course of action may be safely pursued though all other writers may differ, and though the laws of the country and the voice of conscience may condemn. For example, if a man desires to commit a fraud, though the Scriptures may forbid, and society denounce, and conscience scruple, yet if one Jesuit writer express an opinion that, under such circumstances, fraud is excusable, the man is at liberty to say probably it is not sin; that is, he is at liberty to commit the fraudulent act. So Tamburin, advising a son, says, "If you desire conditionally the death of your father, we find no difficulty in replying that it is lawful for you to do so; for supposing a man to say to himself if my father were dead, his possessions would become mine, then the subject of his gladness is not his father's death, but succession to his estates." The doctrine of Philosophical sin is equally startling. By this doctrine it is inculcated that if a person be ignorant of the laws of God, or doubtful as to their true application he may indulge his evil passions to any extent, and his iniquities will be light offences, not meriting God's wrath. Hence they believe that offences of the deepest hue are excusable before God if committed in a paroxysm of passion or under the influence of drunkenness. Thus Stephen Fagundez writes—"Christian and Catholic sons may accuse their fathers of the crime of heresy if they try to turn them from the faith, although they know that their parents may be burnt with fire, or put to death for it; and not only may they refuse them food, if they attempt to turn them from the Catholic faith, but they may also justly kill them; and it is lawful for a son to rejoice at the murder of a parent committed by himself in a state of drunkenness, on account of the great riches thence acquired by inheritance." The author of "The Apology of the Casuists" says—"If men who [illegible] become perfectly accomplished in sin have neither light nor remorse when they plunge themselves into debauchery, and if they have no knowledge of the wickedness of such conduct, I maintain, with all the theologians, that with these actions which savor more of the brute than the man, they do not sin at all." Laney also says—"A monk or an ecclesiastic is permitted to take away the life of a calumniator who threatens to accuse him, or his order, before the public of some great crime, supposing he has no other means of preventing the publication except the calumniator be dispatched." The doctrine of Occasional Indulgence may be mentioned next. By this it is provided that a member of the "Society of Jesus," if he wholly divest himself of his religious dress for a short time, may, during that time, associate with the worst characters for the most impure practices without being guilty of heinous sin or incurring the penalty of excommunication. Then the doctrine of Mental Reservation calls for notice. That is to say that where it does not suit the purpose and work of the Jesuit, he is at liberty to equivocate, and swear falsely. He may repeat words to himself of a different order to those he pronounces audibly so as to shield his conscience. Sanchez, a Jesuit writer, thinks the best course when called to swear on any subject is to say, "Uro, I burn, instead of juro, I swear." Clearly, therefore, we cannot attach much, if any importance, to the declarations of a Jesuit, even on his oath. For the terrible doctrine of Tyrannicide and Regicide there are very many Jesuit advocates. The chief apostle of this doctrine was Mariana, who treats at considerable length on the subject, saying among much beside;—"It is, however, a salutary thought for princes to dwell upon, that if they oppress their people and make themselves intolerable by their vices, to slay them is not only without guilt but is an act of the highest merit." "I shall never consider that man has done wrong who, favoring the public wishes, would attempt to kill him" (that is, a king who is a heretic) "it is not only a lawful but a laudable action," Leckey, in his "Rise and Influence of Rationalism in Europe" says that some years before the publication of the works of Mariana three Jesuits had advocated the same views. And since Mariana's time there have been defenders of the same principle. One says, "Destroy, proscribe, depose heretical kings who will not be corrected, and are injurious to their subjects in things which concern the Catholic faith." And another says, "These may certainly be put to death by any one who has the courage or inclination to kill them." Tyrannicide and Regicide are advocated by the following among other Jesuit authors, Emanuel Sa, Fagundez, Francis Lacroix, John Mariana, Francis Suarez, Anthony Sanctarelle, James Keller, Fernandius, and Gretser.

Such is the morality, such the simplicity, such the piety of the so-called "Society of Jesus!" Alas! that the dear name "Jesus," which is a synonym of all that is pure, truthful, sincere, merciful, and lovely, should be associated with a society of men so notoriously the servants of Satan. With propriety we may apply to the disciples of Loyola the words of Holy Writ: "Ye are of your father the devil, and his works ye do." Such teaching as that which may be found in the "Secret Instructions," and the separate publications of Jesuits, would put to the blush the occupants of the Old Bailey. The authors of such works surpass, in the philosophy of crime—if not in the practice—nine tenths of the convicts at Portland or Dartmoor. Is it any marvel that they have been treated with severity in the past by the varied countries into which they made an entrance? Is it a matter of surprise that they were expelled from England in 1604, from Venice in 1606, from Savoy in 1729, from Portugal in 1759, from France in 1764, from Spain and Sicily in 1767, from Malta and Parma in 1768, and were suppressed by the Pope in 1773. Did not our own government see and acknowledge the dangerous character of the Jesuits in 1829, when the clauses of their expulsion were introduced into the Catholic Relief Acts? And does not prince Bismarck, one of the cleverest of rulers, and one of the most far seeing men modern times have produced, discern in the members of the "Society of Jesus," those dangerous principles which must be the ruin of any people who adopt them? Then why should we English look on with such complacency at the efforts Jesuitism is making in our midst? The Jesuits have always acted so systematically as a body, that the doctrines of one may be imputed to the rest more fairly than in any other class of men. They profess to be the same in their purposes, doctrines and principles now as ever. And the members of the society of Loyola in this nineteenth century are not likely to be less arduous than those of the sixteenth century. Have they not greater facilities? Have they not extended appliances? Have they not a social standing they had not in this country before? Have they not a far less suspicious people to deal with than they ever operated upon? Are they not patronized, aided, and abetted by men who ought to be guardians of our Protestantism and political rights? Surely our liberty is growing into laxity. We need in these solemn and surprising times three things—viz., 1. The earnest and importunate prayers of all true Christians, that he who frustrated and destroyed the priests of Baal, may overturn the base-born designs of these seductive teachers. 2. Earnest efforts on the part of all Protestants to disseminate the truth of Scripture as an antidote to Jesuit errors. And 3. United endeavors to separate from the English church those who, supported by Protestant revenues, are doing the work of Rome—avowedly aiming to unite the Roman with the Anglo-Catholic church. In addition to these three things, is it too much to ask our rulers to imitate the action of Germany?

The Escurial, in Spain, which came so near destruction a few days ago, is nothing but a store of "abominations." We cannot say which is most to be blamed or pitied, the priest, for practicing deception upon his credulous dupe; or the witless Catholic, in becoming his "muff." Certainly they are both heartily deserving of rebuke, the first for his snakishness, and the last for his simplicity. This revelation concerning the palace is yet another testimonial of the apostolicity of the holy Roman church! Unfortunately though it lacks apostolic precedent, and is an innovation on traditional sayings. As we read the following we cannot hinder a sigh for poor, dark, wretched Spain! May God chase the destroyer from her land, and send her light and liberty.

The Spanish Escurial, which so narrowly escaped total destruction by fire, is a regular storehouse of Roman Catholic relics. Besides having no end of relics of the cross, pieces of the sponge and thorns used at the crucifixion, and similar curiosities, there is a "thigh bone of St. Lawrence, with flesh and skin attached, toasted, and having recognizable in it the marks of the prongs of the iron toasting fork, his executioner used at his martyrdom." There are said, in the official catalogue, to be "more than 3,500 bones of martyrs, confessors, doctors, and holy virgins, one of the water pots from the marriage of Cana, when Christ turned the water into wine, and an impression of the last footprint made by our Lord on the Mount of Olives when he ascended up to heaven."

Here are a couple of paragraphs, synoptical of two papers read respectively at the Autumnal meetings of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, just held at Nottingham, and the English United Presbyterian Synod, convened at Birkinhead. They treat on the state of our times,' and confirmatory of our faith. They assure us as we read that we have not mistaken the times, and they are one argument with those who believe in a coming good time without Christ, to prove that we have not overstated the condition of the world.

At the "Congregational Union," the Rev. A. Thomson, M. A., of Manchester, read a paper on "The Influence which Christians should Exert on the Social Morality of the age." He said, "the love of low and sensual pleasure, and the eager pursuit of riches, were two of the peculiar evils of the present time which the Christian church had to combat."

At the Presbyterian Synod the Rev. A. L. Samson, F. S. A. S., of Derby, read a paper on "Our Popular Literature in its Aspect to Morality and Religion." He referred to the cheap literature that was scattered broad cast over the country, and to the pernicious character of much of it, and urged that something should be done in the way of a government censor to protect the masses from the foul garbage to be found on every hand. Passing over the literature of the turf, he asked was it necessary that they should have the details of certain criminal trials, which day by day met the eye of husbands and wives, of young men and maidens, throughout the land? In the department of fiction he deplored the introduction of French novels of a most objectionable character; and while adverting to English writers who were following in the steps of French authors, said he did not altogether exclude George Eliot, whose works, with all their marvelous power, betrayed a coarseness and disposition to sport with subjects pertaining to marital relations which are decidedly French. Referring to the serial stories which appeared in quasi-religious journals he found in them not indeed a hostility to religion, as such, but to everything like definite dogmatic beliefs, which, it was asserted, had only a contracting and hardening effect, and were utterly incompatible with that free play of the human spirit in the fresh atmosphere of human sympathy, and the consciousness of the divine love which was the true and only religion of every man. The wave of infidelity which was rising on the beach, was, he said, worse than the deism of the last century, and to cope with this state of things they must encourage and circulate what was unmistakably a pure and good literature.

An old question is pertinent here: "Can ye not discern the signs of the times?" Oh! that the ministry were as the men of Issacher, who "had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do." (1 Chron. 12: 32)

We are told by many geoligists, who, by the way are frequently neologists, that our world is millions of years old, and that pre-Adamic races existed, and became extinct, long before the Edenic age. The Bible account of the origin of species is scouted by them. But we thank God that he raises up men now and again, not a whit inferior to any one of them, who are able from personal experience to tilt against these wise in the wisdom of the world. Such is Professor Agassiz. We venture the opinion that the said authority is peerless among geologists. His great experience renders him more trustworthy than any living scientist. The following will be read with pleasure by those who by faith understand that the world was made by the word of God, and who have received the Divine account by Moses—"the truth—in the love of it." He writes:

"Our visit to the Galapagos has been full of geological and zoological interest. It is most impressive to see an extensive archipelago, of most recent origin, inhabited by creatures so different from any known in other parts of the world. Here we have a positive limit to the length of time that may be granted for the transformation of these animals, if they are in any way derived from others dwelling in other parts of the world. The Galapagos are so recent that some of these islands are barely covered with the most scanty vegetation—itself peculiar to these islands. Some parts of their surface are entirely bare, and a great many of the crater and lava streams are so fresh that the atmospheric agents have not yet made any impression upon them. Their age does not, therefore, go back to earlier geological periods; they belong to our time, geologically speaking. Whence, then, do their inhabitants come from, animals as well as plants? If descended from some other type belonging to some neighboring land, then it does not require such unspeakable long periods for the transformation of species as the modern advocates of transmutation claim, and the mystery of change, with such marked and characteristic differences between existing species is only increased and brought to a level with that of creation. If they are not autochthones, from what germs did they start into existence? I think that careful observers, in view of these facts, will have to acknowledge that our science is not yet ripe for a fair discussion of the origin of organized beings."

A Bit of Correspondence.

THE LETTER.

Br.: You wanted to know if I could use tracts to a good advantage. If they are neutral I should be happy to circulate some, but shall not advocate any distinct doctrine. I am henceforth dead to all names but one—that is the name of Jesus, my blessed Lord and Savior. I am satisfied that parties and societies only gender strife and create divisions. I find evil and good in all churches. I intend to love all that love Jesus. Yours, etc.

THE REPLY.

Dear Br. ———:

I am now at work for the Association, assisting Br. Himes in the great work of spreading important and long-neglected truths of God. I was very much surprised and very sorry to hear from you such a report as your letter brought me. These great truths, Br. ———, cost you and I too much to so easily sacrifice them, or, from any consideration, keep back a part of what Paul declared to be 'the whole counsel of God' whether men hear or forbear.

It is not for us to decide what will cause divisions or promote harmony, but, what has God revealed in his word? Our Savior says: 'Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell ye nay, but rather division. For from henceforth there shall be five in one house, divided three against two and two against three.' 'From henceforth,' that is, until the judgment, these things shall continue. And does not history declare that the words of our Lord have to the very letter been fulfilled? If, in the dark days of Papal Rome, there had been none to 'contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints,' but for fear of causing divisions, they had all yielded to the errors of the age, where should we be at the present time—without a Luther, Wesley, Whitfield, yes, and we could well and truthfully add, without a Christian in the world!

You know it is often said, It don't matter what we believe if we only love Christ; that is the essential thing. But what is it that has corrupted the Roman church, if it is not their faith or belief? We all have to admit that as a general rule the more men have of the truth the nearer they live to God. I am aware that many are apt to present the truth in a manner not calculated to touch the hearts of men but this is not a fault of the truth, but one of our own. What we must do is, approach people kindly and let them know we love them, and because we love them we want them to investigate what we have learned to be the truth, and what they will find will be a great help to them in working out their own salvation.

Since I received your letter I have been looking over our Advent faith to see what I would be willing to give up or hide from the world. The first and most important is the second coming of our Lord as an event near at hand. Next, the resurrection of the dead, with it the time of reward and the complete destruction of all evil. I must confess, Br. ———, that to me these are blessed truths; and what shall I substitute in their place? Shall I cast all this aside and accept as my creed the doctrines of men? Shall I rather please men than God? If God has given us light shall we hide it, or let it shine? Which? These are important questions, and may the Lord help us to so decide that when he shall come as judge to act upon our decisions, we may be found of him in peace. A. W. T.

Where Some of the Papers go.

Some time ago I noticed in The Times a request that any person taking the paper and failing to receive it regularly would let you know, and perhaps you could remedy the fault. Well, my case is this. I have obtained several subscribers to The Times, and those receiving their papers at Rochester, Ind., complained bitterly at not getting them. They inquired weekly; but no papers. So they got discouraged and quit. I could not understand the matter until last night I was looking over a lot of papers purchased at the post office by a dry goods concern, for wrapping paper, and what should come to light but ten copies of The Times and one Crisis. This answ[illegible] the question as to "Why don't I [illegible] my Times?" But it does not solve the question 'Can it be remedied?" The post-mistress boasts that she will do as she pleases, and no body can hinder her; and I believe her; for several petitions have been sent up for her removal, but without success. I send you a couple of numbers as a sample of their treatment; and hundreds of others were treated the same way.

A Friend.

Note. The corners on which the subscribers' names were pasted were torn off.

From C. C. Marston.

It was my privilege recently to visit Lanark, Ill., and preach to a good sized and intelligent audience some of the living truths of the "everlasting gospel." It was here I learned the simplicity of the word of God. How dear and yet how blessed was the experience! Friends that were dear had to be sacrificed. A future big with promise and popularity with all its charms had to be given up. But with all this I am glad I made the change. It was the happiest step of my life. Thank God that I took it. God recognized the change and blessed it, and this is the best of it all. The "Winebrennarians" here, who forbade me preaching the truth in their house, and because I would not preach fables locked their chapel against me, and that, too, while I was their regular pastor, have never prospered since, as I am told by persons living in the place. No wonder! How can a church expect to prosper when they oppose the truth of God? They immediately sent to Pensylvania, and got an "Indian preacher," a big gun as they called him to redeem the society; but the effort was a failure. And they are beginning to find out that it will require something besides "smart preaching" to wipe out the stain of that persecution. Some of their best members have not been inside of the church since they locked the doors on me. Quite a number of the original membership are fully in sympathy with the gospel and looking and waiting for the revelation of Jesus Christ.

At Foreston preached two nights; and had excellent meetings although there were but few out. The meetings at Elida over the Sabbath were attended by a good interest. The Lord by his Spirit was with us and the church was much revived and encouraged. And here allow me to make mention of the liberality of the friends in this vicinity in raising recently the greater part of a handsome donation for me and family. Many thanks for the unmerited favors. A portion was also raised at Rochelle and Amboy.

At Byron, six miles from Elida, I preached once. This is a new place. There was a large turnout; nearly all non-professors. The best of attention was given to the word.

To-day a Mormon minister from Council Bluffs, Iowa, called upon me at my home to get an understanding of what he had heard of as Adventism. We had a long and somewhat interesting conversation on various topics relating to the nature of man, destiny of the wicked, Book of Mormon, &c. Finally we arranged for a public discussion to be held in Feb. 1873, probably in this place, on two propositions involving the immortality question and the authenticity of Mormon revelations. He has the appearance of being intelligent and sincere—two essential qualities of a successful debater. May the truth triumph!

From S. B. Mabey.

Oct. 25, I left Amboy for Mineral, where I found a few who were holding on to the faith. Came to Neponset on the Sabbath, and preached at the chapel. The Lord blessed and we had a profitable season waiting upon him.

On Monday came to Biggsville to see Br. Royce and family, whom I found all well. He is now carrying on drug business, but his heart is with us in the cause of Christ, and he is ready to make a change wherever duty demands. At eve. started for the West; riding all night, being often reminded of the prophecy—"He shall recount his worthies; they shall stumble in their walk." Reached Hopkins, Mo., Oct. 29, where I met Br. Fuller. Held meetings two evenings. An open door in all this field for labor in the cause of Christ. Passing on to Olathe, Kan., I put up with Dr. Bills, of the Presbyterian church, and attended a lecture that evening by Eld. Milligan, on moral and political reform. He spoke of the present condition of the affairs of the country, and the changes needed to fortify it against future revolution. He thought there was imminent danger in the moral world, yet expected a time of universal peace prior to the Lord's coming. But the reign of righteousness will be after the advent, and in the new earth.

At Hillsdale I found Br. Patten and family, formerly of Sandwich, Ill. Held a pleasant interview meeting at the school house. Good attendance, and I was asked to remain over Sabbath, but could not at this time. I found a number who love Jesus and want the right kind of help in all this region. Saturday I reached Columbus, about 500 miles from home. I think passengers coming west will do well to come by the B. & M. and K. C. R. R. The officers are gentlemen; a dining car is attached through from Chicago to Kansas City without change.

I found Br. Sanford and family, Dr. Childs and Br. Bennet and others of like precious faith, working for the Lord. At a recent meeting six united with the church. They talk of building a chapel, and have $537 subscribed, expecting to raise, $1,000 by spring, and then erect the building.

Made the Bero church a visit Sabbath, Nov. 10, finding them in a prospering condition. They had many testimonies for Jesus, before and after preaching. A number will unite with both of these churches soon. An open door in this country for work. Many are poor financially, but rich in faith, heirs of the kingdom, and willing to do what they can to sustain the well begun work of salvation.

From D. R. and M. S. Mansfield.

That our friends may know where we are and what we are doing, we would say: Eight months ago we left Buchanan, so long our home and immediate field of labor, to assist in settling the TIMES office in its new location at Norwood Park. It was a new village, and the circumstances were such as for a long time to require nearly all our time. Now others have taken our places, and we are free to devote our time to preaching the word.

We have now rented Stanly Hall, No. 619, West Lake St., a little beyond Union Park, in Chicago, and have entered upon a kind of independent missionary effort. Providence seemed to open the way for us, and we rented the hall upon our own responsibility, trusting in the God who forgets not even the sparrows, to sustain us, his servants, while we preach the gospel to sinners, and open a door where all are wellcome to hear of the blessed hope. For this cause we are still willing to sacrifice all. We desire your prayers, that our labors may be crowned with success and result in bringing many to acknowledge of the truth.

From Robert Mann.

THE TIMES is the only pure preaching I get. There is no Advent family here that I know of. I attend the Baptist church. It is the best that is here. I long sometimes to hear an Advent preacher and have the fellowship of those of like precious faith with myself. I love to read the testimonies of the brothers and sisters who are trying to spread the truth. I am trying to do what I can, by lending my paper to those who will read it. My prayer is, that God may help me daily to do more for Christ, and to love him with all my heart.

A. ARMOUR.

Our Young Folks.

The Right Influence.

Willie starts for a walk, meets Johnny.

W. Good evening! Which way are you going?

J. I am going to the temperance meeting.

W. To a Temperance meeting! where?

J. Down in the town hall.

W. What are you a going there for; to sign the pledge?

J. No sir. I signed it long ago.

W. I'll not do that thing. You don't catch me signing away my liberty. I say as father does: there is no harm in taking a glass once in a while.

J. I don't agree with you I think there is great danger even in drinking one glass. My mother says that is the way all drunkards begin, with "a glass once in a while;" and soon they will want it twice in a while, and so on, until they cant do without it.

W. I'll risk that; for my father takes a glass just when he pleases and he will never be a drunkard, I can assure you.

J. I have no father; he has been dead two years. Before he died he told me never to drink the first glass, nor go where it was drank or sold; then I would not be tempted to drink, nor would I ever be a drunkard. And you know the Bible says we should shun every appearance of evil.

W. Well, my mother often talks to me about what's in the Bible, and she wants me to read it, and go to the Sabbath School and so on; but I don't like to read the Bible at all. It is too dull for me.

J. I often read the Bible and Sabbath School books to my mother and sisters while they work.

W. I like fun too well to do that. Sometimes when father has been to a political meeting or some other doings we have a gay time. He will be full of fun, and sometimes talks rather strange. It makes mother feel bad. She will not laugh with him as we do, and I have seen her cry. Then that makes me feel bad. I never like to see my mother cry.

J. Well, I try to please mother, and make her just as happy as I can. You know she has to work very hard to get along with so many, with no income but from her own labors; for I can't earn much. But as soon as I am old enough to work and earn money I assure you she shall have an easy time.

W. I don't have anything to do but go to school and have a nice time. You know my father is doing a good business, and I calculate to take the world easy, for he is able—although I did hear him tell mother the other day, when she asked for some money to pay the wash-woman that she would have to cut down the expenses, for he had to borrow the money to pay the interest on the mortgage. Mother sighed and I noticed she shed tears, too.

J. Don't you think it would please her to have you go to the temperance meeting to-night?

W. Why yes. I know it would; for she has often urged me and father to join the Temperance Society.

J. Come, go with me to-night.

W. Well, I will go this time, to please you, and to see what they do.

They both go to the meeting.

THE NEXT KANSAS CONFERENCE.

Where shall it be held? All the "scattered ones" throughout the State as well as those organized into churches are interested in the answer to this question. The President and Secretary will soon issue the call as directed by the conference. It should be held where the most good can [illegible]complished. Much labor is necessary to p[illegible]fect our organization and put us in order—working order. Now is the time to work. The committee appointed for that purpose, are nearly ready to report a constitution. Shall we prepare a charter and become an incorporated body under the laws of Kansas? is a question to be considered and determined. Let every believer in the coming of the Lord Jesus, who resides within the bounds of this State, when he shall have read this article sit down and write words of advice upon this matter, to the Secretary, that the call may be made for such time and place as will suit the convenience of the greatest number of the brethren and sisters The time has come for those of us who are connected with other organizations, to "come out from among them" and take a bold stand for the truth, as it is in Christ. We have too long held our peace and listened to the sl[illegible]laried priests, about "immortal [illegible]ng spirits," "infants in hell [illegible]going to hell when you die, [illegible] surely die," "there is no such [illegible] death," "where is the promise of his coming?" etc.

It will be necessary for us to make some sacrifice, perhaps, to attend the conference, but let us not shrink from duty. "Behold! the Bridegroom cometh." Let us rally round the blood stained banner of our King.

"Let your loins be girded about, and your light burning, and ye yourselves (every one of us) like unto men that wait for their Lord." (Lk. 12: 35, 36.) Every elder must be there. Deacons should come. Each church should send at least one delegate. All Adventists in the State should either come or write words of cheer, comfort and advice. But where and when shall the conference be convened? That is the question brethren and sisters, throughout the State, let us hear from you. Write to Columbus, Cherokee County, Kan.

AMOS SANFORD, Sec'y.

William Blanchard makes the following confession to the brethren and sisters of the Hoosick Valley A. C. Conference: In view of the unpleasant and embarrassing condition under which I am placed, in knowing that some feel alienated from me because of some errors committed in the past; and desiring to enjoy the individual fellowship of all God's dear children, I freely and sincerely confess that I have erred in many things for which I am exceedingly sorry; and hope and pray that the sorrow I have suffered in the past, because of grief that my brethren have suffered, in consequence of any conduct on my part, will, by the grace of God, enable me me to guard against errors in the future; and I desire to meet any that may feel grieved with anything I have done, and by the grace of God I will be reconciled to my brethren.

(Signed) WILLIAM J. BLANCHARD.

Voted, That we have a committee of three to see to and run the tent for the coming year, as follows: A. B. Sibley, John B. White, William A. Durand.

Voted, That the tent flag be paid for; and the tent repaired and put into the field as early, in the Spring of 1873, as duty may demand.

The reports of the preaching and delegated brethren, were of a cheering character.

WEST VA. AND SOUTHERN OHIO.

The third session of the A. C. Conference of W. Va. and S. O., convened with the Hayes' Creek A. C. Church, Oct. 19, '72. After reading credentials of delegates and calling roll of names, Brs. D. G. Looney, M. G. Lowe and J. S. Chambers were appointed to receive and arrange business for the action of the Conference. The President delivered his usual address. The report of the Secretary showed a gain of two new churches and about seventy-five members during the year.

Report of Treasurer: received $4.00 toward purchasing the tent.

After a free and mutual examination of the Christian character of ministers, all were found to be in good standing except L. R. Kirk, the Cabin Creek church having withdrawn from him as unworthy of their confidence as a preacher or a Christian. Therefore the church put away the offending member and the Conference withheld his license.

Reports of Ministers: Meredeth Hammack traveled 1102 miles; preached 136 sermons; baptized 11 souls; organized one church of 14 members.

J. R. S. Mowrey traveled 2285 miles; preached 197 sermons; baptized 9 souls; preached at 40 different places during the year; traveled 34 miles in two days on crutches, and preached four sermons; organized one church of 8 members.

Reports of Churches: Mt. Pleasant, 45 members, 5 additions during the year; in a good condition, prospects good. One has fallen asleep.

Round Knob: In good condition, 25 members, 10 additions. One expelled.

Hayes' Fork: Prospects glorious; 17 members and 6 [illegible]

Cabin C[illegible]ere trials: but are about to overcom[illegible]a patience; 16 members, 9 additio[illegible]pelled.

Field's [illegible] 15 members, 5 additions; a regular pra[illegible] meeting; in prosperous condition.

Coon Creek: About 50 members, 3 additions, prospects bright.

Poca Fork: Number not known; 11 members last year, several additions and two fallen asleep. None of the members present. (If the brethren will awake to their duty, the next conference report will perhaps be more interesting and profitable.)

Chambersburg, (Ohio) holds her own, about 30 members. Some have the cause at heart They have a pastor.

Rose Valley: Not represented; they are scattered; 7 members still holding on to the faith.

Dull's Creek: (New) 14 members, prospects good.

West Fork: (New) 8 members, prospects good for building up.

Churches Received: Dull's Creek, organized by M. Hommackwith 14 members, Jan. 10.

West Fork organized by J. R. S. Mowrey, with 8 members, Sept. 8.

S. P. Whitney, J. R. S. Mowrey, M. Hammack, and D. Hammack, who also received license, were elected standing committee. Officers elected: S. P. Whitney, President, and State Evangelist; J. R. S. Mowrey, Secretary, M. Hively, Treasurer.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED: 1st. Resolved, that we recommend to the several churches of this Conference the propriety of encouraging tho who seem to have gifts to preach or exhort; and that they be first licensed by the church with which they are connected before they are received as preachers by this Conference.

Resolved, That no licensed preacher be ordained by this Conference except he come recommended by the church with which he is connected.

Resolved, That we, as a Conference, recommend to the several churches the propriety of taking some measures, such as they may deem best, for the support of the preachers who labor among them.

Resolved, That we render a vote of thanks to the people for their hospitality.

Resolved, That we adjourn to meet Oct. 19, 1873, the Lord willing.

Our meeting, which lasted three days, was attended with good results. Doctrinal subjects and practical duties were freely preached. We were all strengthened and cheered by the testimony of those of like precious faith. Brethren of other denominations came in and took part with us. It was a good time. Thirty-three sat down at the Lord's table, and Br. S. P. Whitney baptized five souls in the likeness of Christ. Twelve united with the church.

Our attention was called to a misrepresentation in a religious and political newspaper, entitled The Baptist Record, headed "The Adventist." It commenced as follow:

"The sensation created in our rural districts by the Adventists is gradually dying out. The people who were drawn to hear them by their strange doctrine have become satisfied that the old paths are the safest, and are content to walk therein."

We are glad indeed that the Record has this opinion of us; perhaps it will let us alone hereafter. We hope, however, that it will not misrepresent us. If he can persuade himself that the sensation is dying out, there is no doubt but he will feel secure in the "safe old paths," viz.: immortal-soulism, going to heaven and hell at death, and his peculiar way of proving close-communion by saying Judas was not in when Jesus broke the bread and blessed it, and blessed the wine, and said (to the twelve) "drink ye all of it." But large armies have been surprised when they felt secure. The greater the security the greater will be the surprise.

He further states that the Adventists cannot write half a dozen sentences of good English, yet they are as full of fight over the Greek and Hebrew as a copperhead is in August. I did not know before that copperheads would fight over Greek and Hebrew. He next speaks of a church trial, saying that the church met and expelled a member without singing or praying or reading. This is untrue. Gal. ch. 6 was read, and prayer duly offered with the usual service of singing. The brethren were exhorted to examine the accused in the spirit of meekness, considering themselves lest they also be tempted.

If judgment begins at the house of God The Record has not done its duty, for I am certain that the Missionary Baptists have expelled at least a dozen members in the last two years without even notifying them that they were going to try them for advocating what the Bible teaches. Two cases occurred at Rush Creek and Flat Fork. Br. Chas. Lowe, of the former place, asked one of the officers why they took his name off the church book, he answered, "Why, we heard that you had joined the Adventists." But, enough. "They that live in glass houses should not throw stones." J. R. S. MOWREY, Sec'y.

To Correspondents.

S. A. MOSHER.—There was only one dollar in your letter.

Michigan.

The notice of the postponement of the Michigan Conference was accidently omitted last week. Due notice of time and place will be given.

Accounts Due.

There is a large sum due on Book Accounts, in sums varrying from one to fifty dollars and upwards. Prompt payment will greatly relieve our finances. It is only a little for each one, but the aggregate is a large amount.

Some to whom we sent 'Statements of Account' last summer have never made any reply at all. We want to hear from you, and soon. These many little items make up a heavy burden for us to carry. 'Let every one bear their own burden,' and our own will be very much lighter.

Renew Your Subscriptions.

We are sending notices to all our subscribers whose time expires this year. In some cases we receive remittances after these notices are prepared and forwarded to the postoffice. If any receive notices after they have sent in their renewals, they can keep the 'return envelope' for another occasion.

We have waited patiently upon hundreds of our subscribers for months, and, in some cases two years or more. We trust now every one will promptly remit for past dues, and for six months or a year in advance.

The Destiny of Man.

We have examined this work by Br. Wm. Erwin, of the Methodist church, and ordered a supply to accommodate our customers. The author takes up the Scriptures, or most of them which bear directly upon the subject indicated, and searches to know the mind of the Spirit. A large number of copies of the work have been sold among Christians of other churches and it cannot fail to do good. It is finely printed, and bound in full gilt. Price by mail, prepaid, $1.50.

Letters Received.

☞ ALL letters received at this office are acknowledged under this head. This acknowledgement is a receipt for whatever money the letter purports to contain. If the date on your paper is not changed within three weeks after your letter is thus receipted, write at once. HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an inquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R.," running from Chicago through Galesburg to Burlington, has achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Route to the West. At Burlington it connects with the great Burlington Route which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Chicago on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the C. B. & Q. and Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

An Exposition of Matthew Ch. 24.

The twenty fourth of Matthew has been truthfully called the Savior's Great Prophecy.

I purpose in giving an exposition to, 1.—Define its character. 2.—To show its natural divisions. 3.—To define the events embodied in this discourse of our Lord, as to their time and order. And—

1. This prophecy, in character, is consecutive to a great extent, although one section of the chapter may be looked upon as complex or mixed.

A consecutive prophecy is one, the events of which follow in unbroken successive order.

The natural divisions of this chapter are (1) from the first to the fourteenth verse, covering a period of time from Christ's public ministry to the end of the dispensation. (2) From the fifteenth to the twenty-eighth verse, the subject is somewhat complex. (3) From v. 29 to the end of the chapter, we have presented the signs of the near approach of the advent, characteristic of the time of the end, and what the duty of the people of God will be when those signs are developed.

With these preliminary thoughts suggested I will enter upon the third proposition, which will be to define the events of the prophecy in time and order of fulfillment.

Commencing with the chapter we read:—

> "And Jesus went out and departed from the temple, and his disciples came to him for to show unto him the buildings of the temple. And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things? verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down." (vv. 1, 2.)

In the above we have the destruction of the Jewish temple predicted, which led the disciples to ask three questions recorded in v. 3:

"And as he sat upon the Mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming and the end of the world."

It is to be presumed that those who said, "Tell us when shall these things be," had it in their minds that the temple would endure so long as time should last. Hence, when the prediction was made, "There shall not be left one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down," the disciples who inquired concerning the time of the accomplishment of these things, associated the destruction of the temple with the coming of the Lord in judgment, and the end of the world. But the manner in which the Savior answers the above questions, makes them separate and distinct as to the time of their fulfillment.

"And Jesus answered and said unto them, Take heed that no man deceive you." This is properly the opening of our Lord's discourse; and begins with a timely caution against human deception. Satan's most successful agencies are men whom he controls, in politics and religion, so that through the perversion of national institutions, and the establishment of idolatry, he has led the multitude captive at his will, and been able to keep up a warfare against God and truth, for nearly six thousand years.

"For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many." (v. 5.) In this verse we are informed of the nature of the deception against which the church is warned, coming through a human agency, by which so many will be misguided. It is many coming in the name of Jesus of Nazareth, "saying, I am Christ."

It is generally claimed that this prediction of many false Christs had its fulfillment between the middle of the second century and the beginning of the sixteenth. Buck, in his Theological Dictionary, enumerates twenty-four as having appeared between these two points, at different times, who led away many of the Jewish people after them. But the false messiahs appearing to the Jews could not fulfill the Savior's prediction, for the following reasons:

1. Christ is specially cautioning his church against deception.

2. The followers of Jesus have never been affected by the false pretensions of those who have appeared to the Jewish people.

3. Twenty-four cannot by any consistent reasoning be called "many."

4. The false Messiahs came in their own name, to communities of unbelieving Jews, entirely ignoring the Prophet of Nazareth; wheras Jesus said to his people, that many should come to them saying, "I am Christ!" Or according to the version of an English author—which I apprehend, expresses in clearer light the sentiment of the text—"Many shall come in my name saying I am for or instead of Christ, and shall deceive many."

With this view, the text has had a most remarkable fulfillment, right in the professed Christian church. Many have indeed come to those bearing the Christian name, saying, "I am for, instead of Christ," arrogating names, titles, and a work which alone belongs to the Son of God. The extended catalogue of supreme pontiffs who have filled the Roman See, have all claimed to be Christ's vicegerent, or a vice-Christ; i. e., one for, or instead of Christ.

Again, the Romish church recognizes a human mediatorship, and a power vested in man to expiate transgression. Her confessors claim the power to grant absolution to the penitent, for, instead of Christ, as his divinely appointed agent. But the gospel reveals the fact that Christ is the only head of the church, and the only Mediator of the New Testament, and the sole intercessor between God and man, "The man Christ Jesus."

Oh! what a deception has been the great Western Apostacy! How many blind votaries of a christened idolatry, or papal superstition, have in the last thirteen hundred years come bending at the shrine of the image of the Virgin, and committed the keeping of their souls to human hands. Every functionary in the Romish church from the pope down to the humblest friar, claims to stand instead of Christ as mediator to the church on earth; and thus the abomination of desolation stands in the holy place. And have there not been many who have claimed to occupy the before named relationship of mediator to the Christian church? If so, the prophecy has met with a fulfillment in those false mediators, which we cannot possibly find in the false Messiahs, of which Buck speaks, as having appeared in every instance to the apostate Jews, between the middle of the second and beginning of the sixteenth centuries.

The next events predicted by the Savior are recorded in vv. 6, 7: "And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars. See that ye be not troubled: for all these things must come to pass; but the end is not yet. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places."

I understand the events foreshadowed in the sixth verse to have had their fulfillment in the barbarian incursion from the North, Alaric, with the hordes of warriors, swept in upon the Western division of the Roman empire, like a storm of fire and hail, about the last of the fourth century, desolating Gaul, causing the seat of empire to be removed from Rome to Ravenna, and then sacking the city of the Cæsars; and this was followed by the naval wars of the Vandals, under Genseric, who is described in prophecy under the symbolic representation of a burning mountain cast into the sea, who took Carthage, ravaged the Mediterranean shores, and destroyed the Roman fleet at Majorin; and all this was followed by the aggressive wars of Attila, the king of the Huns, and of Odoacer, king of the Ostrogoths, who succeeded in extinguishing the imperial government of the West.

"Nation against nation," etc., seems to have had its fulfillment subsequent to the breaking up of the Roman empire, when the barbarians established themselves as distinct kingdoms upon its ruins.

In this particular, prediction of nation against nation there is something peculiarly striking. For Jesus says, when such things occur "the end is not yet." And still, in various other portions of prophecy, we are plainly taught that the last part of the gospel age is to be characterized by wars and agitations among the nations of earth. But it is plain that the difference between the wars realized subsequently to the breaking up of the Roman empire, and those which are to designate the time of the end, is to be seen in this respect. Nation against nation implies wars of an aggressive nature; while those which will cause men's hearts to fail them for fear, and for looking after those things coming on the earth, to be realized in the last end of time, will be of a domestic or "civil" character.

"And there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places." v. 8. I understand this to have had its fulfillment in the reign of the Emperor Justiman of Constantinople, as may be seen by the following quotation from Gibbon. In the closing part of the forty-third chapter of his Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, he says:

"The near approach of a comet may injure or destroy the globe which we inhabit; but the changes on its surface have been hitherto produced by the action of volcanoes and earthquakes. The nature of the soil may indicate the countries most exposed to these formidable concussions, since they are caused by subterranean fires, and such fires are kindled by the union and fermentation of iron and sulphur. But their time and effects appear to lie beyond the reach of human curiosity; and the philosopher will discreetly abstain from the prediction of earthquakes, till he has counted the drops of water that silently filtrate on the inflammable mineral, and measured the caverns which increase by the explosions of the imprisoned air.

"Without assigning the cause, history will distinguish the periods in which these calamitous events have been rare or frequent, and will observe that this fever of the earth raged with uncommon violence during the reign of Justinian. Each year is marked by the repetition of earthquakes of such duration that Constantinople has been shaken about forty days; and of such extent that the shock has been communicated to the whole surface of the globe; or at least of the Roman empire. An impulsive or vibratory motion was felt, enormous chasms were opened, huge and heavy bodies were discharged into the air, the sea alternately advanced and receded beyond its ordinary bounds, and a mountain was torn from Libanus and cast into the waves, where it protected, as a mole, the new harbor of Botrys, in Phenicia.... Two hundred and fifty thousand persons are said to have perished in the earthquake of Antioch, whose domestic multitude was swelled by the conflux of strangers to the Festival of the Ascension.'

Again, the same author, in speaking of the pestilences which characterized the reign of Justinian, says:

"Ethiopia and Egypt have been stigmatized in every age as the original source and seminary of the plague. In a damp, hot, stagnating air, this African fever is generated from the putrefactions of animal substances, and especially from the swarms of locusts, not less destructive to mankind in their deaths than in their lives. The fatal disease which depopulated the earth in the time of Justinian and his successors, first appeared in the neighborhood of the Pelusium, between the Serbonian Bog and the eastern channel of the Nile. From thence, traversing as it were, a double path, it spread to the east, over Syria, Persia, and the Indies; and penetrated to the West along the coast of Africa, and over the continent of Europe.

"In the spring of the second year, Constantinople, during three or four months, was visited by the pestilence; and Procopius, who observed its progress and symptoms with the eye of a physician, has emulated the skill and diligence of Thucydides, in the description of the plague of Athens. The infection was sometimes announced by the visions of a distempered fancy, and the victim despaired as soon as he had the menace, and felt the stroke of an invisible specter. But the greater number, in their beds, in the streets, in their usual occupations, were surprised by a slight fever; so slight, indeed, that neither the pulse, nor the color of the patient gave any signs of approaching danger. The same, the next, or the succeeding day, it was declared by the swelling of the glands, particularly those of the groin, of the armpits, and under the ears; and when these buboes or tumors were opened, they were found to contain a coal, or black substance, of the size of a lentil. If the tumor came to a just swelling and suppuration, the patient was saved by kind and natural discharge of the morbid humor. But if they continued hard and dry, a mortification quickly ensued, and the fifth day was commonly the term of his life.

"The fever was often accompanied by a lethargy or delirium; the bodies of the sick were covered with black pustules, or carbuncles, the symptoms of immediate death, and in the constitutions too feeble to produce an irruption, the vomiting of blood was followed by a mortification of the bowels.... Youth was the most perilous season; the female sex was less susceptible than the male; but every rank and profession was attacked with indiscriminate rage, and many of those who escaped were deprived of their speech, without being secure from a return of the disorder.

"The physicians of Constantinople were zealous and skillful; but their art was baffled by the various symptoms and pertinacious vehemence of the disease: the same remedies were productive of contrary effects, and the events capriciously disappoined their prognostics of death or recovery. The order of funerals, and the right of sepulchers were confounded; those who were left without friends or servants, lay unburied in the streets, or in their desolate houses, and a magistrate was authorized to collect the promiscuous dead bodies, to transport them by land or water, and to inter them in deep pits beyond the precincts of the city.

"Their own danger, and the prospect of public distress awakened some rumors in the minds of the most vicious of mankind; the confidence of health regained revived their passions and habits; but philosophy must disdain the observation of Procopius, that the lives of such men were guarded by the peculiar favor of fortune or providence. He forgot, or perhaps he secretly recollected, that the plague had touched the person of Justinian himself, but the abstemious diet of the emperor may suggest, as in the case of Socrates, a more rational and honorable cause of his recovery. During his sickness, the public consternation was expressed in the habits of the citizens; and thus idleness and despondency occasioned a general scarcity in the capital of the East.

"Contagion is the inseparable symptom of plague, which by mutual respiration is transferred from the infected person to the lungs and stomach of those who approach them. While philosophers believe and tremble; it is singular that the existance of a real danger should have been denied by a people most prone of vain and imaginary terrors. Yet the fellow citizens of Procopius were satisfied, by some short and partial experience, that the infection could not be gained by the closest conversation; and this persuasion might support the assiduity of friends and physicians in the care of the sick, whom inhuman prudence would have condemned to solitude and despair.

"But the fatal security, like the predestination of the Turks, must have aided the progress of the contagion; and those salutary precautions, to which Europe is indebted for her safety, were unknown to the government of Justinian. No restraints were imposed on the free and frequent intercourse of the Roman provinces; from Persia to France the nations were mingled and infected by wars and emigrations, and the pestilential odor which lurks for years in a bale of cotton, was imported by the abuse of trade into the most distant regions.

TO THE MEMORY OF BROTHER ADAM MACKIE.

He sleeps! We've laid him down to rest,
His hands upon his lifeless breast:
His eyes are closed. He sees no more,
His friends, who now his death deplore.

His voice is hushed, that loved to tell
Of Jesus, whom he loved so well.
It was his earnest work, and prayer,
That sinners would for life prepare.

His pain is o'er; his work is done;
The battle's fought, the reward won.
Henceforth, for him in heaven is laid
A crown of life, that cannot fade.

We fain would have held back the foe
That laid the Christian herald low:
For oh! the harvest is in view,
And earnest workers are so few!

By faith, we know our heavenly Friend,
From the beginning sees the end;
And what to us is now so drear
Hereafter will look bright and clear.

Ours Still.

Oft we think of many dear ones
Laid to rest in vale and hill,
Lost to sight, but in remembrance
And in prospect ours still.

Just as from the evening fireside,
Friends go from us one by one,
And the family circle scatters
Saying good night, 'till night is done;

To the longer sleep, how many
Of our fairest, dearest, best,
With their farewells faintly spoken,
In the graveland calmly rest.

But as taken from nightly slumber,
Comes the household, one by one,
Meeting with a glad good morning,
At the rising of the sun;

So the morn of life in splendor,
Shall awake from vale and hill,
Friends to come with joyous greeting,
Found again, as ours still!

An Advent Chapel and Preacher.

HOW THEY APPEARED TO A REPORTER.

It is said to be a good thing "to see ourselves as others see us." A brother in California has forwarded the following article taken from a San Fransisco daily paper, and thinks our readers may enjoy reading its ignorant but not ill-natured scoffing. We presume Br. Fassett enjoyed the article as well as anybody; and probably set it down for a "good, free advertisement." The reporter's story is as follows:

Elder O. R. Fassett, of the Advent Chapel, on Mission street, near Fifth, has been delivering a course of historical lectures in the Chapel during the past week. His lecture was on the lives and times of Cyrus and Alexander. Eld. Fassett and his wife have been preaching this gospel in the chapel for some time, and have gathered about them a few wide-awake and credulous saints who are straining their eyes to catch the first glimpse of the coming event, and standing with their night gowns about them awaiting the near approach of kingdom come. Their numbers are few, and their means scanty, but their hopes are high, and their lamps are trimmed and burning.

THE ADVENT CHAPEL.

It would be difficult to find a more unpretending place of worship than the little chapel in the city. The floors are bare with the exception of narrow strips of carpeting down the aisles. The seats are bare wooden benches, and the pulpit is a modest structure of painted redwood. The walls are bare and devoid of ornamentation with the exception of a few paintings on canvass, artistically done in oil and lampblack.

THE MYSTIC SCROLL.

In the rear end of this modest little temple, hanging on the wall above the pulpit, is a mysterious scroll, upon which are painted a number of problems in mathematics and designs from animal life. It is called a propheticchart, and is the result of the workings of the mighty intellect of Eld. Miles Grant, who spent many months in evolving order out of the chaos of the Old Testament and reducing it to the comprehension of the average American mind. It purports to illustrate the lapse of years from "Paradise Lost" to "Paradise Restored" in Jubilee Cycles of 8,400 years, showing the general drift of current events from the time Nebuchadnezzer went to grass until Christ went to Bethlehem. [We are not sure that Br. Sheldon will be quite pleased that the credit of his chart should thus be given to another. Ed.]

THE PROPHECIES IN OIL.

On the left side of the canvass is a large painting of Nebuchadnezzer, the first king of Babylon, in tights and a leather apron, with a crown on his head. According to this painting Nebby was a tall, handsome, muscular, and powerfully-built man. The portrait is supposed to have been taken immediately on his return from browsing in the pastures of Judea, and may be regarded as strong evidence of the fact that during his exile he lived in clover. At his feet is a large nugget from the original ophir, marked C. O. D. in large letters, from which it may be inferred that it came through with Lent's diamonds by express. This inference is confirmed, by a drawing of a large octagonal diamond on the opposite side of the scroll. In the next column are several drawings of frightful animals, beginning with a winged lion. Below this is a fine drawing of a large grizzly bear, rooting for soap-root, and next below this is a painting of a hydra-headed leopard, with flaming wings. Below this is the picture of a fierce-looking

DOUBLE-HEADED BUFFALO BULL.

And at the bottom are two cornucopias. In the next column are drawings of a ram, a merino lamb, with long, straight horns, and a fine drawing of a Cashmere goat's head. At the bottom was a large drawing of red-bellied alligator standing on its tail, with open mouth and grasping tentacles. In another line is a lion's head surrounded with a nimbus, and below it is a daring acrobat astride of a double-headed lion. On other portions of the chart are drawings of the new and full moon, a glacier, and a diamond in the rough. The intermediate space is filled in with an amazing combination of figures which set at defiance all known rules of mathematics, and arrives at the alarming result of 1875, and as the author was figuring on the time for the final send-off of things terraqueous, it furnishes indubitable proof that before the next presidential election we shall have a universal dynasty on earth, and coallitions, subsidies, and reform candidates will have passed away. There is no disputing these figures, because nobody understands the process of the calculation, and figures can't lie. By this process, if they only understood, Tweed and Connolly could easily have squared their accounts with the New York treasury, and vindicated themselves from the suspicion of having stolen the city's money.

ELDER FASSETT'S LECTURE.

This chart was of great assistance to the elder in illustrating his lecture. With a long stick he pointed out on the ram's horns, the relative positions of the countries about which he was speaking. He sketched the career of Cyrus briefly, and then turned his attention to that of Alexander, which he followed in detail from the time little "Lecky went to school to Lysimachus and learned Homer's Illiad to the day of his death." He followed the illustrious conqueror through all his battles and conquests from his first expedition against the Thracians to his invasion of Asia and the final overthrow of his great opponent, Darius, and the conquest of the world. Then turning to the scroll on the wall he pointed to each object separately and said of this event: "This was the mighty struggle between the leopard and the bear, the goat and the lamb."

AND ALECK WEPT.

He continued in this manner, to show how the events in the career of the conqueror were foretold in the prophecies and symbolized on the scroll. Alexander, pursuing Darius and his defeated army, finally came upon his adversary, betrayed, bound, and dead, with his body pierced with darts. His great heart was moved with pity at the sight and he wept, and ordered that his dead enemy's body should be interred with military honors. Then the lecturer followed the conqueror from the Indus and Ganges to the tomb of Cyrus, and all that he found there was two old broken shields, a cimeter, and dust and mould. The conqueror turned away from the tomb impressed with his own fate and the vanity of mortal greatness. A few years more he pursued his victorious career, and then he, the conqueror of the world, was conquered—by the cup. The armies of Persia, Egypt, and the whole world went down before him but he himself succumbed to the fiery draught of Hercules' cup in the thirty-third year of his age and the twelfth year of his triumphs. Within fifteen years after his death every one of his relatives were cut off by violent deaths. "This object," said the lecturer, pointing to the hydra-headed hyena, "symbolizes the family of Alexander." He closed by contrasting the lives and characters of these two great conquerors with the Prince of Peace, referring to the vanity and instability of earthly glory and renown, and exhorting his hearers to forsake the groveling things of earth and turning themselves to righteousness, prepare for the present coming of Christ.

A School.

Editor Times: While recently listening to a most interesting course of lectures by one of our faith, on prophecy and ancient history, the thought has occurred to me again and again, how very excellent would be the training of theological students under competent professors who entertain and advocate the correct views as to the nature and destiny of man and of this planet, which are put forth by our despised sect! Having set at the feet of orthodox Gamaliels in one of our leading seminaries, I can perhaps appreciate this better than the majority of your readers. But all can come to considerable realization of the relative, superior benefits of such culture under such masters.

Looking over my old classics, I have for them a new and keener relish; as what they tell now stands for its true worth: the history or poetry of heathendom. We have the men to fill the place in a seminary as indicated: O. R. Fassett, J. W. Whitmore, A. A. Phelps, and others who might be named, would, I am confident, most creditably fill the chairs respectively assigned to them—if they would accept. We have men of German birth who are eminently well qualified to instruct as tutors in the two Bible languages usually taught in the theological seminaries of the immaterialists.

It is in the nature of such institutions to produce a beneficial reflex action on the body of professing Christians. I know some of our good men are afraid of everything of this kind; usually exclaiming their objections thus: Time is too short; and, it would make a party. Both of these sayings are insufficient to keep the project from the hopeful contemplation of many men of common sense. To consider and refute the last mentioned objection might lead to talk upon other and entirely different topics; and so I now let the twin cry go at present with a single expression of disbelief in its validity. It is the tendency of genuine Christian enlightenment to cure or kill party spirit.

How much would it cost to rear and endow a theological seminary? The "locality" would be given, perhaps with a bonus from some town or village. Would not an offer of that kind be legitimate? And without farther formal "endowments," with such students as might come from the locality chosen, the professors could be maintained; the principal portion of their salary coming from yearly subscriptions and collections. Say that I give $25 a year—and very many could afford to give that—and John Doe, $100 and Richard Roe, $5; an open statement being made of the receipts from quarter to quarter.

And we might do (as the privilege seems open) as the Episcopalians have done at Cambridge, Massachusetts: procure license to attach our School of the Prophets to some college or university; so far as the use of library and the first study of languages is concerned. I think this privilege could be obtained in one of the Western seats of collegiate learning. May be this would be the preferable place. At any rate, pray think of it. "Despised" as is our sect, our money is as good as any body else's; and there may be some collegiate institutions where our "heresy" would not be so distasteful as to preclude the idea of granting the opportunities sought on fair compensation from our people. And regarding the shortness of time, this plan has special commendatory features. We might convert the old faculty of the college!

If we could raise the money, I would prefer a liberally endowed seminary—including a preparatory school—all our own. But I doubt, myself, not the ability of the aggregate membership of our despised sect, but the willingness to contribute in sufficient sums—this, that, and the other reason, worthy of respectful admission, is being alleged. This is only a speculation of mine, however. Who knows that $100,000, or more, would not come up on a call for a Second Advent theological school?

The institution would need to be lifted above the assaults of mere faultfinders. Men who have shown their ability and steadfastness by their works could (and must) be selected for the untrammeled management.

But what am I saying? Building castles in the air? Nay, verily. There are, to-day, hundreds of young (and youngish) men in this country who would flock to such an institution, properly organized and officered. Run no medical or dieting hobbies into it, and it would prosper from the start. Keep it to its purpose, with singleness of mind, under the authority of a wise constitution and by-laws, with men like Fassett and Whitmore to instruct and administer, and its benefits would be incalculable. Here would be an organized challenge, on a strong foundation, for the Word of God! Would not our heavenly Father be pleased with such a school; and might we not expect a very great, special blessing upon it?

In this connection I might suggest and advocate the plan of establishing a few boarding schools for boys and girls (together) in our country; conducted by those who know and love the truths we cherish. But I would not turn attention or reflection from the theme I have touched above. What say your readers, generally—those who are accustomed to correspond with you? Would it not be well to open your columns, by particular invitation, to speech and proffers on this subject?

We have the TRUTH. We have bright boys growing up in our households, who have an inclination to go forth and preach the Word. Some of them already have a dislike to orthodox recitations and rehearsals, and would, from their own minds, seek a school of theology of their own pure faith. And having the opportunity to be fully furnished forth as scholars in the field, they would hesitate not at all in their dedication to the special preaching or teaching service of the Advent church. In this view is there not an obligation upon us in the direction mentioned?

May there be a candid and generous review of this matter. C.

Faith and Fruit.

Of late much has been said and written on the subject of sanctification. Some of this I could understand and endorse, but much has been otherwise.

I have a number of times in my life seen persons brought into what they call a state of perfect sanctification, and I have often thought, if that was sanctification, and all men must be sanctified or lost, I, for one, must certainly be damned. I think when God made man he gave him reasoning faculties. Now he comes and reasons with him (Is. 1: 18), and tells him what will be the result of listening. Hence, I believe God to be a God of reason; that he comes to men with reasonable things; and what is more reasonable than the law or rule he has given men for his government. He says, this do and ye shall live! Now when Christ prayed God to sanctify them through this truth (John 17: 17) he meant that it should be as David says, "a lamp to thy feet," warning them of constant danger, and leading them always to do right, and speak right, in and under all circumstances, controlling all their actions and words. The true grace is not a state of feeling that carries men away, and makes them act very strange, sometimes at least;

Neither is it to go to church to-day,
To look down and seem to pray;
And e'er to-morrow's sun go down,
Be dealing slander to the town.

I believe Christ had it about right when he said, "he that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them." It could not then be said—

"Does every sanctimonious face,
Denote the certain reign of grace?
Does not the phiz that scowls at sin,
Oft veil hypocricy within?"

We should all be showing by both precept and example that

"It is not for sect and creed to fight,
And call one's zeal the rule of right,
When all they wish is, at the best,
To see their church excel the rest.

This we do see among those that profess the most of that kind of sanctification that "can be felt to the finger ends." Now I believe our fingers must be sanctified, i. e., set apart to work in God's vineyard, not to take what does not belong to us, neither in money or reputation, but to minister to the wants of the afflicted, clothing the naked, doing the Master's business generally. Then the rest of those beautiful verses come in so well,

Oh! no! Religion means not this!
Its fruit more sweet and fairer is,
Its precept this, To others do,
As you would have them do to you.

It grieves to hear an ill report,
And seems with human woes to sport;
Of other's deeds it speaks no ill,
It tells some good or else keeps still."

This is the kind of sanctification that would make men as happy here as they could well be in a mortal state.

Why should we have so much of feeling without the true action. Let the tree be good and the fruit will be truly good. There will be no penuriousness among God's flock; no withdrawing the hand from doing God's work. Our ministers need now of this sanctification. Many of them preach well, pray well, and exhort well; but when out of the desk are full of all manner of jesting and evil speaking, which is not profitable for the flock. And, what is more, if a brother does not come up to their standard, put him down, when perhaps they are doing things worse themselves. And to divert attention from their own evil doings they will encompass sea and land to put him down. Brethren, these things ought not so to be. The Lord is now at hand, and there is much to be done and but little time to do it. All the laborers are wanted. Some are falling in death or disease; others seem to be tied up, some from one cause and some from another. Many lack the means to go forth. Yet the cry comes, come and help us. They can't go. What is the matter? Alas! many of those who profess to love God—their fingers are too long; they hold on to God's money. Rich in this world, praying for sanctification. God pity such sanctification. They have seen the sword coming, but warned not the people.

All can do something. One may do this part of the work and another that. All are not hewers, all are not drawers of water, but they must all work. I remember a case that occurred in my ministry within the last year. There are many such, and this is one reason of discouragement with our ministers. I was invited to visit and preach in a certain place. I did so. They seemed to enjoy it, but not a word about my expenses, only, "We are so glad you come! God bless you; come again!" And had it not been for a brother in the ministry, I should have been out both in time and in money.

Brethren we want the truth to have such an effect upon us that selfishness shall be driven out; worldliness with its lusts shall be forgotten; the pride of life be forever banished, ourselves dedicated to God's service. Then we may see men inquiring, "What shall we do to be saved?" God's word will prosper, and men will not wait for God to come to them, but they will come to him.

I love God's plan, and love his kind of pay: "Peace like a river." Right actions, like the waves of the sea, one following another, until Jesus comes. Then I expect all that have loved God more than they have loved "the fish" (John 21: 15), will shine in glory on the new earth forever. Amen.

Query.

Why is it that our orthodox brethren are so opposed to the idea of the earth being the future inheritance of the saints; especially when we see them clinging to it with so much tenacity, even in its present sin-cursed state? And why do they speak with such irreverence of a part of God's created works, as did a minister of the gospel a few Sabbaths since, while contemplating with scorn and derision, the idea of this "little, gross, dirty earth," (as he was pleased to call it,) being the future home of God's people. The speaker dwelt with much enthusiasm on the joys of heaven, and Christians soaring away to those blissful mansions at death. Yet I will venture to affirm that not one out of a hundred that entertain the belief of going to heaven at death, are really willing to submit to death's ordeal in order to gain that "heavenly land, the saints' secure abode," of which they talk and sing so much.

Again, where is the consistency of that poetical effusion, "Death is the gate to endless joy, and yet we dread to enter there," if the sentiment be really true. But I am digressing. Let us come back to earth again, and inquire, is not the earth as much the handiwork of God as the heavens? And did not the great Architect of the universe, in the beginning, pronounce all of his works, (the earth not excepted,) not only good, but very good?

And do our opponents fully realize how much they are indebted to this tle, dirty earth," for even their y bread, to say nothing of the ifold comforts and luxuries it af- s for poor, finite man? 'Tis true old mother earth has been groan- under the curse for nearly 6,000 rs; yet when the "times of the res- tion of all things" shall come, l, thank God, we believe it is com- soon,) then it will be restored to riginal Edenic state, beautiful and ious as it came from the hands of Creator. When, as the inspired rd delares, "the meek shall inherit earth, and delight themselves in abundance of peace." Then "shall righteous inherit the land and ll therein forever." Amen.

(2 Thes. 1: 9, 10.) can theological manufacturers fill in the assertions or insertions that the wicked class will not be destroyed, but do now, and will continue to weep, wail and gnash their teeth to all eternity, and that too in the sight of God, how can they do this without the guilt of taking from and adding to the word of God, and being justly denominated in a modern sense, Shoddyists!

The hour and article of death is vended, too, as the second coming of Christ to the good man; if so who is personated by death when it overtakes the bad man? We learn from the Scriptures of truth that death is an enemy, but that the victory over death will be given to the saints at the last day. (See 1 Cor. ch. 16.) Hence, to call death Christ, or Christ death, is rank shoddy!

Again: The words of the Savior in Mat. 10: 27—"And fear not them which kill the body but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell" (gehenna) are often the heading or sample held up for inspection, and properly, too; but in order to weave in a certain kind of material of human desire, and make it whole cloth, one very important thread in heading, the word destroy must be clipped and the ravel of torture inserted instead thereof; and, also, the word hell twisted considerably to give a different appearance, and then the shuttle of human agency (the tongue) filled full of imagination, does the rest, and a theological fabric is thus presented and offered for sale to the highest bidder, with the assurance that it is a genuine article, "dyed in the wool."

Alas! for the simple truth of God's word in the hands of man! In conclusion, as advisory to all anxious inquirers after a genuine article of Scripture fabric to be clothed withal, that being thus clothed one may not be found naked, I would say, examine carefully both chain and filling, and see if there be a consistency and evenness in the work, a harmony of all the parts; if it will bear inspection by daylight as well as by gaslight, and especially, it when brought under the light of inspiration, if it will appear the same, without displaying ugly spots, discolored, or thin, or may be rotten, useless, in consequence of too much dye-stuff. And notice carefully the filling, whether it be made of the flyings and sweepings of ancient factories, such as heathen superstition, or thrumbs and ravels of ancient or modern tradationary mills; for if any of these things enter the composition, you have a perfect right to denounce the fabric as shoddy. Dead Dogs, or Chained—Which?

I have been, for some time, a careful reader of the various articles in The Times upon the subject of "entire sanctification," "dead dogs," etc., and I find some difficulties and queries arising in my mind relative to the matter. If you will permit, I would like to ask two or three questions. And first, I wish to know if by any possible means dead dogs can have a resurrection? If not, then is not the man who has got all his dogs killed and buried absolutely perfect? Or, in other words, has he not attained a condition of absolute perfection in which he cannot sin—from which he cannot fall—it being utterly impossible for him to sin?

Again, if it is possible for the dead dogs to have a resurrection, what better is the man's condition with them killed than it is with them securely chained?

With these thoughts in my mind I am led to ask the question: dead dogs or chained—which? And now I may make a suggestion to our brethren who advocate the dead dog theory, namely: Would it not be well, when the dogs are all killed, to bury them with the chain on, so that if by any means they should come to life again, their owners will not be wholly under their influence? Unstability.

Never was there a time that called for more self-denial than the present. Everything that is contrary to the spirit of the gospel should be abandoned. At the present time, nothing can be more appropriate than these words, as uttered by the apostle: "Be ye also patient, establish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth night." (Jam. 5: 8.) The hosts of sin are pressing hard. It is time that every wandering heart is fixed on God. For nothing hinders the progress of the church so much as the unstability of its members.

Only those who are steadfast to the end, will receive the crown. God has, from the first, been unchangeable in all his ways. Were it not for this, the human race would be hopelessly lost. If we would be saved and save others, we must be more like Jesus. More stable; for with him there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.

The Outlook.

We thought we had said a good word for Br. Hastings, and perhaps done our duty. But when we received "the fire number" of the Christian, we felt that we must let him tell his own story to our readers. And in another article which we cannot find room for this week, he remarks that the most grateful help he can receive is new subscribers. We propose that every subscriber to The Times take the Christian also. But this is Br. Hastings' story.

It is not far from twenty years since the publisher of the Christian began the issue of religious tracts and books. Commencing with a capital of perhaps forty or fifty dollars, saved from the labors of some years pioneering in the gospel field, the work was carried forward through varied toils and privations until a beginning was made, and a wide interest was awakened in the circulation of tracts.

After six or eight years thus devoted to writing, publishing, and distribution of publications, failing health, limited means, and desire for freedom from petty business details, for more exclusive devotion to the work of writing and preaching the gospel of Christ, led us to desire some associated effort for the issue of cheap, earnest, evangelical, and unsectarian literature.

We entered upon this work in good faith, hoping for the establishment of a large and flourishing interest; but after some five or six years of experience we became convinced that we had undertaken too much, and that if we would be free from sectarian titles, entanglements, and dictation, we must return to our original plan of action, and commence our work anew.

To do this was attended with some difficulty. With limited means, without influence or patronage, with no channel of free communication with the scattered friends, among whom for years the writer had gone preaching the kingdom of God, we undertook to resurrect a buried business, publish tracts for free distribution, and books such as no other publisher would venture to print for fear of loss, and to accomplish single-handed, and in the face of misapprehension, work that even societies and associations were unwilling to undertake.

A little more than seven years have elapsed since we were, in the providence of God, permitted to establish ourselves at No. 19 Lindall street. Part of this time the country has been rent by wars and strifes; years of labor have been largely devoted to aiding the needy at the South; some three or four hundred barrels of clothing and supplies have passed through the Repository, and have been distributed at the south by members of our family and other faithful workers; tracts and papers have been given to every one who has asked them; and a considerable amount of miscellaneous labor has been accomplished.

Notwithstanding these unfavorable circumstances and extra cares, our publishing work has steadily gone forward, until it has probably amounted to, at current rates, between twenty and thirty thousand dollars a year; though the annual cash receipts of the Repository have never amounted to twenty thousand dollars; $19,799.17 in 1871 being the highest figures shown by our books, against which stood cash disbursements for the same year to the amount of $18,862.31, besides several thousand dollars for bills for machinery and material, which were carried over for payment to 1872. As our bills, balance sheets, and statements were consumed, we cannot give the exact amount of the expenses and liabilities for 1871. And if we had preserved all our papers, we could never have known or shown the full amount of labor and business done in the Repository. The most important work, and that without which all the rest would have been in vain, has been done without fee or reward. To have collected pay for it, would have sunk the enterprise below sounding long ago. Those who have worked for money have had their wages, and their accounts show for themselves. Others who have declined in part, or in whole, pecuniary recompense, have, as their reward, a heap of ashes and a pile of debts, and a share in results so grand and vast that eternity alone can unfold and exhibit them. Those who have envied us our possessions of plates which no one else would print from, the tracts which have never paid their cost, are welcome to help themselves to all they want of ashes, cinders, and old iron; but what has been done for God and humanity, small as the amount may be, is beyond the reach of human power. The little tracts that have flown like winged seeds to every quarter of the globe, can never be hunted up, gathered up, nor burned up, till the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved. We leave them with the Lord, whose blessing alone can make them fruitful to his glory.

The Christian, called into existence by the fact that we had no medium through which we could freely make known our work, or disseminate our publications, has been thankfully received and measurably successful; our regular issue for some time past having been thirty thousand copies per month; and the Little Christian, of which some twenty-two numbers have been published, has circulated to the extent of about twelve thousand.

An unknown number of tons of tracts and books have been scattered over the land. The tract plates are now all destroyed, also some of the books and pamphlets; but they have, we trust, done some good, and we are content.

From the beginning our type has been set in the Repository, and within the last two years we have undertaken to do our own printing, and have purchased presses and other requisite machinery to the amount of five or six thousand dollars, which has to some extent involved us in debt. We trust our kind friends who have busied themselves with our affairs, wondering why we did not beg for aid, and reporting fabulous stories about our vast wealth, will be relieved of further anxiety on this point when we inform them that if every article we have on earth, even to a toothpick or the shirt on our back, with everything possessed by every member of our family, were sold today, and the money applied to pay our bills, we should still be owing some thousands of dollars, all of which we hope may be paid without their assistance; for if we were hungry and homeless, we would never think of telling them our story, or asking them for aid.

The work we do is not for man, and it is not dependent upon man. No person on earth can say, "I have supported the Scriptural Tract Repository." We have never asked any one to contribute a dollar to its funds; but we have asked the Lord the things of which we have had need. And while jealous surmisers have been whispering their stories about our wealth, one great reason why we have refrained from explicit statements of our financial affairs was that the publication of the simple facts in the case would have been a stronger appeal for pecuniary aid than our faith in God allowed us to make.

We have doubtless erred in our management many times. We have been unable to please ourselves and others very often. No doubt it would have been better for us if we had adhered as strictly to our original programme "No debt," as to the kindred principle "No begging." We accept without a murmur whatever of chastening and toil our faults and failures have brought upon us, and pray that we may have grace to follow the Lord fully and to the end.

The future is bright. We do not see a cloud. The outlook takes in the mighty roll of everlasting years, and though trifling hindrances may be around us, they are not worthy to be compared with the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory which bounds the bright horizon.

And as we sit at our borrowed table and write by our flickering candle in one corner of a large and lonely building, "a great while before day," we are full of peace and rest, and joy and in hope and faith.

What we shall do brethren we know not. Where we shall pitch our moving tent is known to our Father; and it is enough for him to know it. Our way is forward, and the dead past must bury their dead. Whether we work or rest, prosper or fail, live or die, we are the Lord's; and

ALL IS WELL.

The Spirits in Prison.

A correspondent, referring to our article on the ordination of Mr. Jackson at Leavenworth, quotes Mr. J's. words, "I simply affirm my belief that the door of mercy will be opened in the future for the return of lost souls," and asks: "Will you please indicate wherein this statement affirms anything contrary to the idea expresed in 1 Pet. 3: 19, 'By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison,' and also 4: 6, 'For this cause was the gospel also preached unto them that are dead.'" We might avail ourselves, in reply, of the fact that Prof. Bartlett, in the October New Englander, (who ought to be right on a critical point in his own department) and other able exegetes interpret these passages as having no reference to anything done in the spirit world; but as we have not been able to see our way clear to accept that interpretation, we cannot honestly propound it. But we object to any inference from a brief allusion to a somewhat mysterious fact in the experience of Jesus, just after his death, no inspired writer has authorized, and which contradicts numerous explicit statements of Christ and his apostles. Whatever Christ did on the occasion mentioned by Peter, is expressly limited to the case of the antediluvians. But as to the effect of death in closing probation, we have the clear teaching of Jesus in the narrative of the rich man and Lazarus, in his warning his opponents of the danger of dying in their sins, and in his reference to the night of death, "in which no man can work," as an argument for right action now while the day lasteth, as well as in his declaration of the "eternal" character of the results of the judgment day. Moreover, we find in the New Testament the affirmation, "it is appointed unto all men once to die and after that the judgment," and that "we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." And this belief it was which Paul considered essential to the work of the ministry, for he immediately adds to the words last quoted, "Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord we persuade men." We suspect that the Leavenworth council did not remember this significant passage.—Advance.

Modern Infidelity.

No candid observer will deny, that whatever of good there may be in our American civilization is the product of Christianity. Still less can he deny that the grand motives which are working for the elevation and purification of our society, are strictly Christian. The immense energies of the Christain church, stimulated by a love that shrinks from no obstacle, are all bent toward this great aim of universal purification. These millions of sermons and exhortations, which are a constant power for good, these countless prayers and songs of praise on which the heavy-laden lift their hearts above the temptations, and the sorrows of the world, are all the product of faith in Jesus Christ. That which gives us protection by day and by night—the dwellings we live in, the clothes we wear, the institutions of social order, —all these are the direct offspring of Christianity. All that distinguishes us from the pagan world—all that makes us what we are, and all that stimulates us in the task of making ourselves better than we are—is Christian. A belief in Jesus Christ is the very fountain-head of everything that is desirable and that is praiseworthy in our civilization, and this civilization is the flower of time. Humanity has reached its noblest thrift, its grandest attitudes of excellence, its high-water mark, through the influence of this faith.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

SUSPICION—Always to think the worst I have ever found to be the mark of a mean spirit and a base soul.

Advent Christian Times.

CHICAGO, TUESDAY, December 10, 1872.

THE Independent accuses the Congregationalist of believing that God might justly damn an infant for the sins of Adam. We fear the charge is true.

A little girl in Ithaca, just before she died, exclaimed: "Papa, take hold of my hand and help me across." Her father had died two months before.

When such seed as this is sown by strictly orthodox journals, without even a hint that it is 'carnel' or 'tares,' need we be surprised if a plentiful crop of Spiritism crowns the harvest?

WE cordially endorse Br. Cogswell's article which we copy from the Crisis. It is better sense and better religion, [illegible] than most of the namby-pamby isms about effecting a union of oil and water—attempts to make two who are not agreed 'walk together.' God did not call out Adventists to unite the good in all churches, but to tell them of neglected truths. That is our work, especially; and the results the Lord will take care of. Circumstances may alter cases, but there can be few exceptions to the principle so forcibly enunciated by Br. Cogswell

THE Congregationalist alludes to that feeble Universalism which is afraid to take the bull of the Scriptures, man fashion, by the horns and either deny its inspiration or heroically undertake to expound it into the teaching of the exact opposite of what it says.

Now, if it be 'heroism' to expound the Scriptures so that they may teach the exact opposite of what they say, of what a body of heroes may orthodoxy boast! From Genesis to Revelation they have turned the Word of the Lord upside down—made mortal immortal, death life, earth heaven, a 'kingdom under the whole heaven,' a realm beyond the skies, 'this same Jesus,' a spiritual influence—but enough. Heroes do not always engage in a good cause.

PROF. BARTLETT—we mean S. C., the dogmatic and the belligerent, as his brethren style him—writes in the last New Englander of the passage in Peter's Second Epistle concerning the preaching to the spirits in prison. His theory is that the spirits in prison heard the gospel not while they were in prison, but that Christ preached to them by the mouth of his holy prothets while they were on the earth, and not after they went to hades. This is the only meaning, he insists, which can be grammatically maintained.

For once we have no doubt but that the Professor is right. But inasmuch as so much is made of the grammar of this passage, we propound a question: Did the inspired writers always use good grammar? And is grammar to be insisted upon in exposition, even if it carries one to the length of making the Scriptures contradict themselves?

As the years come around and Mr. Muller sends out his annual acknowledgments of bounties received, there is a stir in certain quarters, and a manifestation of righteous indignation that he should set up the claim that what he receives is in 'answer to prayer.' Now, it is true that his reports are, practically, appeals to the benevolent. But so are all well made reports of charitable institutions. But there is a power in Mr. Muller's reports not common to such documents. Who will say it is not the power of 'the closet?'

Meanwhile, it is well to remember that all do not have the same gifts. Because Mr. Muller is right and successful, it does not follow that his is the only legitimate system of benevolence. Let each occupy in the gift God may have bestowed, without jealousy of others for their greater gifts.

BR. WM. H. WYCKOFF, of the American Bible Union, says: 'Only lately we learned of an old man in the central part of South America (where no Christian had penetrated) who received from his son a testament, which the latter took from this city, and he read it night and day. It proved the power of God to his salvation. He rejected all the superstitions of popery, and all the artifices of the priests, and lived and died an humble believer in Jesus. We greatly need assistance to furnish Spanish Testaments to those who will read them, and profit by them. Send us aid, and remember the work in your prayers. God has said that "those who honor him he will honor."'

Any who feel able to help forward this good work can send their contributions to the 'American Bible Union,' 32 Great Jones St., New York.

AN exchange tells us that—

"Rev. N. L. Brakeman, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Michigan City, Indiana, preached Sunday night, Nov. 10, by request of the brotherhood of locomotive engineers, a special sermon to railroad men. The text was taken from Nahum 2:3, 4, as follows: 'The chariots shall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation, and the fir trees shall be terribly shaken. The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another in the broadways; they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightning.' Many of his hearers wondered if that really was Scripture language; and if so, whether the prophet had a modern locomotive or a lightning express train in his mind's eye when he uttered it?....The present was shown to be 'the day of his [God's] preparation' for the coming of his kingdom, and railroads were a mighty agency in hastening its final advent."

We thank our opposers for every admission as to the time we live in. All who seriously investigate the subject seem to arrive at one conclusion — that we are certainly in the last days. We will not here stop to argue which view of the nature of impending events is correct. We might appeal to the readers of the daily press, however, as to whether the world's conversion appears to be an imminent event. To us there appear to be no signs of the anticipated temporal millennium. The indications are rather of ripeness for the judgment—all cups of iniquity about full.

A WANT.

"A cheap edition of the Jubilee Harp," writes a correspondent from California, is much needed, to supply chapels so that all strangers can have a copy, or so that at least each seat can be afforded a volume. The volume of hymns, without music, is cheap as book rates are; but we suppose our correspondent would have an edition which could be furnished at the same price as the smaller editions of the Episcopal Hymnal, which were sold at twenty-five cents each. A large edition subscribed for in advance, by our churches, would alone justify the necessary outlay and work at this time, at our office.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

Br. G. Wright is holding a protracted meeting at Port Sanilac. The prospect is good——Br. L. Reimer has commenced holding meetings, preaching in the German language, in Philadelphia. Sustain him with your prayers. He has, also, added a tract on the Rich Man and Lazarus to his list of German tracts, and has in preparation another upon 'The Fifth Universal Kingdom.'——Br. H. Davis, of Mass., thinks of visiting Arkansas. Should he do so, our brethren there will find him a laborer fully deserving their confidence and esteem.——The church at Rochester, N. Y., have taken a most important step in the work of building a chapel—having purchased a fine lot, 40 100 feet, on Howell St., near St. Paul. The Lord grant unity, whole-heartedness and success to the church in this grand enterprise.

A Question of Principle.

"He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

I have a serious question to propound to you, my brother or sister, whoever you are, who believes the truth of God's Bible in regard to the near second personal coming of Christ, to raise the dead, judge the world, destroy the wicked, restore paradise, and establish his glorious "kingdom under the whole heavens," when the will of the Lord will "be done in earth" as perfectly as it is now done in heaven; and that question is this: is it RIGHT for you to keep your light under a bushel? Is it right for you to cling to churches that utterly ignore the most of those God-given truths? Is it right for you to pay your money for preaching what you know to be directly contrary to what God's word clearly teaches? Will God be pleased with such a course? Is it LOYAL? Can the Lord say "Well done" to you for it? When Jesus plainly says, "Where I go ye CAN NOT come," is it right for you to sustain a system that says all good people do go where Christ has gone as soon as they die? Is it right to make Christ lie, and the devil tell the truth? Is it RIGHT? But you say, you do not believe it, and you let it go into one ear and out of the other. But see here; if you belong to a church that declares such sentiments in their creed, you have to sanction the creed, and become part and parcel of the church, and what the church declares you declare. Two men may enter into a co-partnership, and both alike are responsible. So, by remaining in connection with a church that is believing and advocating that saints go to heaven, or to their reward, at death, when the Bible declares that they "cannot" go there, and invariably defers rewards till the judgment, at the end of the world, you give your money and influence against the TRUTH.

The churches teach that the world is increasing in holiness, and is soon to be converted. You know "evil men and seducers" are waxing "worse and worse." They teach that the wicked are to be tormented forever and forever, and you know that the Bible plainly teaches that they are to "be destroyed," "be consumed," "be burned up," "be as though they had not been." You believe that doctrine greatly dishonors God and drives men into infidelity. Why then sustain such a sentiment?

They teach that the saints are to inherit heaven. You know the Bible clearly teaches that "the meek shall inherit the EARTH," "the land," and "shall dwell therein forever." Are they not preaching "another gospel"? Read what Paul says about such in Gal. 1:6-8.

But you say there is no church where you live that is of "like precious faith." Then stand alone for God and his word. Let the whole world know you believe God's truth, and will obey it, even if it is "at the loss of all things," even friends you love. Better have God's approbation, which is better than life. Let your light shine, and raise up a church in the name of the Lord that will "wait for his Son from heaven." There are many places where there is a little company that are laboring, struggling, and striving, to keep the truth before the people, and show men that it is better to believe God, than the traditions of men; and in all such places there are some that are not willing to come out and identify themselves with the truth, but cling to their church relations. Is it honorable to do so? We have a dispensational truth. It is an important truth, and the "cross" of this age is in confessing this truth. If you are not willing to "bear the cross," can you expect to "wear the crown"? It looks to me like being ashamed of Jesus and his "word." It looks like disloyality. Is it not?

Look at these questions candidly. Examine the motive that induces you to remain where you are. Is it for fear of the speech of people? Is it that you want a good name? Is it that you do not like to go with the despised few? Jesus says he that seeks to save his life shall lose it. Man "looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh at the heart." The day is at hand that will try men. We shall all want the aprobation of the Judge then. If we are ashamed of him or his words now, he declares he will be ashamed of us then. If we confess him now, he will confess us then. "Walk in the light."

D. COGSWELL.

Election Thanksgiving.

"Thank God, the election is over," has been the utterance of some lips and is, really, the language of many hearts. It is not our purpose to advert to the reasons which justify this eucharistic exclamation: for we wish to show that some Christian men have much occasion for gratitude that there has been an election, which absorbed so much of their time and attention. We believe, the last few weeks may afford not only profitable lessons to many Christians, but, may prove to them they have material for thanksgiving of which probably they are obvious. Lest any should fail to apprehend our meaning, we venture to bring a few things to their remembrance, that they may not forget all the benefits they have enjoyed.

Many have learned, during the election canvass, for instance that business need not necessarily engross their attention to the extent they have supposed. It has been possible to leave it for many hours at a time. Some have devoted nearly every evening of the week, to political duties. This is not blamable. It may have been a more Christian use of time than they have ordinarily made. The chief benefit however, is that their old notion, that they cannot attend prayer meetings because of the imperative demands of business is exploded. No Christian man, who has found time for political meetings, will delude himself with such an excuse any longer, and certainly he will not have the assurance to plead it with his pastor and brethren. He will be thankful to know that trade does not suffer by his absence, and, as he has so often said, he "would love to be at the prayer meeting, if it were not for business," he will now show the church the proof of his love. The cares of this life will no longer hold him. He will, now, go to the week-evening assembly chanting with David, —"Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers: the snare is broken and we are escaped."

Other brethren have learned they are more robust in health than they supposed. Hitherto the danger of exposure to night air has been the "lion in the way" to keep them from evening meetings. During the fall they [illegible] attended several meetings at night, which have been continued [illegible]. They have been crowded [illegible]ance, and often the air has been [illegible] impure from defective ventilation. Some times even these brethren have gone to outdoor gatherings, and stood two or three hours on damp ground. They have survived it all, and are none the worse. These will be glad that satan can no longer get an advantage over them, by pleas about night air and regard for health. They have more than to bless the Lord who "healeth" their diseases; they can praise Him for curing their delusions. Henceforth they will be found, "not forsaking themselves together, as the manner of some is."

Others have found in these weeks that they have gifts of utterance of which they were heretofore ignorant. During this electoral canvass they have been surprised at their stores of knowledge and ease of expression. If they have not made speeches to large audiences they have freely expressed themselves to a dozen or twenty people at a time—about as many as are found at many prayer and conference meetings. They have pictured, according to their political pred-elections, the blessings or the evils of the present administration till they have astonished their friends and neighbors, by their new found faculty. Of course they were very much interested or they could not have spoken so earnestly and well. They do not think as much of Gen. Grant as of the Captain of salvation, nor value Horace Greeley's writings as they do Holy Scripture. They have only discovered they had latent capabilities, of which they have been in ignorance or they would never have plead they "could not speak in meeting." They are of course now divided in their emotions of shame at their silence in the past, and gratitude for their newly discovered powers. "Out of the abundance of the heart" will they now speak. We shall hear them "exhort" and "testify for Christ." Having learned their tongues are "as the pen of a ready writer," they will say "My lips shall praise Thee. Thus will I bless Thee while I live. I will lift up my hands in thy name."

We might mention other benefits for which some Christian men will be thankful for the election canvass of 1872, but we forbear. Surely the discovery, that, they need not always give business such close, personal supervision, that their health will permit more exposure than they thought and, that, they are able to express themselves with so much facility will awaken in them much of gratitude. "Who so is wise, and will observe these things, they shall understand the loving kindness of the Lord."—The Baptist Weekly.

The Boston Fire.

Did it all happen by chance this burning up of so many millions of property, or did the prophet mean some thing when he said: "Shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it?" Yes, all the evil that fell upon the city of Boston, in the late terrible conflagration, was of the Lord, in the sense that he permitted it. It would have been an easy matter for him to have so influenced the minds of those having charge of the engine-room in the building where the fire originated, that it never would have originated. But it was permitted, and for some purpose. What was that purpose is a proper inquiry.

In reference to God's providences, the Psalmist says: "Whoso is wise and will observe these things, even they shall understand the loving kindness of the Lord."

There is a difficulty in being able to discover the special reason of all such providences, and yet to the humble inquirer, and specially to the sufferer, God's Spirit may give the revelation. He may impress the truth on their hearts, and show them the way in which God would have them walk. But there is no difficulty in deriving general lessons of duty from all such visitations. It teaches plainly that there is no safe place for riches, only in the treasurehouse above. Who ever thought of the possibility of granite blocks melting like lead in the flames. Who would have dreamed the day before that those solid blocks, with the facilities that the fire department possessed for putting out fires, could possibly have been swallowed up by the devouring flames in a few hours? Yet it was done; and another illustration furnished of the fact, that "riches take to themselves wings, and fly away." It teaches clearly, also, our dependence upon each other, and therefore the duty of seeking each other's welfare. There is scarcely a corner of our land but what will, more or less, feel the blow that has fallen on Boston just as they did the one which fell on Chicago a year ago. There is not a national benevolent institution in the land which will not have its income lessened by the loss sustained by these Boston merchants. Distant as we are from that city, we feel it now; and more than ever have had the lesson impressed upon our hearts, that God, in providence, as well as in word, enforces the precept: "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others."—Christian Press.

Four Suggestions to Those Who Read the Bible.

1. Read it as God's message to you. Pause often at a passage—one perhaps that you do not understand fully; and think, well this is something my Father, the "Father of mercies," or my Elder Brother had in his heart to say to me, some word of love, or sympathy, or direction. I must get its meaning. Pause especially at those precious passages that have become life to the dead; such as, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life;" or those that have been an unspeakable solace to the dying; as, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me." Pause, tarry, linger about them like that impotent man by the pool of Bethesda; an angel may come and stir the waters.

2. "Search the Scriptures." Like the traveler lost in the forest, searching for his way out; like the mariner, in dark and tempestuous and dangerous seas, searches his chart for sunken rocks or dangerous headlands, that he may direct the ship in the safe channel; like the diver, who, with hazard and peril, searches for pearls and diamonds among rocks and shells, many fathoms down in the dark seas; like one who searches for hidden treasure; search in deep and tremendous earnestness, and your labor shall not be in vain.

3. Cherish a love for it, and cultivate a delight in reading it.

I have read with astonishment, of a French nobleman, who read, every day, three chapters, with head uncovered and upon his knees; and also of a poor blind girl of the same country, who, having obtained the gospel of Mark, in raised letters, and learned to read it on the ends of her fingers, till the sense of touch thickening and hardening, she cut it away, in order to make it more sensitive, only to destroy it. At this sad discovery she presse the word of God to her lips, and, i tears, said: "Farewell, farewell sweet word of my heavenly Father food for my soul, I must part wit thee." But finding, to her surprise that the lips were more sensitive tha the fingers, discovered the forms of th letters; she read all night long with heart overflowing with love. Dr. El liott, poring over his Bible for hour together, at fourscore and five, says "I am reading news." Augustine after his conversion, loses all relish even for his favorite author, Cicero and with love-enthusiasm and grea joy, devotes himself to this new an wondrous book, reading it like a me sage of love; can we get this relish Can we catch this spirit?

Live it! An Indian nobleman, god less and Christless, having listened t some boys reading a chapter in th gospel in a mission school, said "Well, if you only live that chapter a well as you have read it, I will neve say another word against Christianity.

The life is the best of all testim nies for Christ. The "living epistl known and read of all men," are thos that most effectually persuade the u believing.

Admiration for the innocent an godly lives of the saints has led mor than Justin Martyr to the foot of th cross. Let not your walk be a lifele book, but a living, speaking, activ Christ.—Christian Press.

An Exposition of Matthew Ch. 24.

"The mode of its propagation is ex- lained by the remark of Procopius mself, that it always spread from the a-coast to the inland country; the ost sequestered island and places hich had escaped the fury of its first assage were all exposed to the conta- ion of the ensuing year.

"The wind might diffuse the subtle nom; but unless the atmosphere be eviously disposed for its reception, e plague would soon expire in the or temperate climates of the earth. ich was the universal corruption of e air, that the pestilence which burst rth in the fifteenth year of Justinian as not checked or alleviated by any fference of the seasons. In time, its st malignity was abated and dispers- l; the disease alternately languished; it it was not till the end of a calami- ns period of fifty two years that man- nd recovered their health, or the air pure and salubrious quality. No ets have been preserved to sustain account or even a conjecture of the mbers that perished in this extraor- nary mortality. I only find that for nths, five, and at length ten thousand rsons died in Constantinople; that ny cities of the East were left vacant, d that in several districts of Italy e harvest and the vintage withered the ground. The tripple scourge war, pestilence and famine afflicted e subjects of Justinian and his reign disgraced by a visible decrease of e human species, which has never en repaired in some of the fairest untries of the globe."

It appears to me that there cannot found a more striking fulfillment of rist's prophecy of pestilence and rthquakes than what is furnished in e foregoing extract from Gibbon.

"All these are the beginning of sor- ws;" i. e. the before mentioned events to cluster around the commence- nt of that long period of Papal trib ation which is to come on the church Christ. It is generally conceded at the twelve hundred and sixty ars of persecution had their begin- g somewhere in the reign of Jus- ian, from A. D. 526 to A. D. 533; l from the foregoing quotation from story, it will be seen that the age of stinian, more than any other sover- gn that ever occupied an earthly rone was distinguished by famine, stilence, and earthquakes in divers aces; so that it is said that during reign there was "a gradual decrease the human species."

"Then shall they deliver you up to afflicted; and shall kill you, and shall be hated of all nations for my me's sake." (v. 9.) It was in the ys of Justinian that the saints were livered into the hands of the little rn power which was to wear them t for a time, times and the dividing time; during which time they were ted of all nations for Jesus' sake. is was not and could not have been filled in the persecution the Jews re subjected to; for in the room of ir being hated for Jesus' sake, they re the most inveterate haters of rist and his people that could be und, and remain so to this day.

But without any chance to doubt, refers to Christ's elect. They are e ones who have been hated for name and sake of Jesus. (1.) By e Jews. (2) By the Romans. (3) y the Mohammedans. (4) By the gan nations in general, wherever e standard of the cross has been ised. (5) By the apostate Christ- ns, all of whom have their turn in reaking their hatred upon the inno- nt flock of God. ALBION ROSS.

A Mechanical Marvel.

A German, of Cincinnati, has on xhibition, in the window of a jeweller f that city, a complicated piece of me- hanism, which he calls "die Leben- uhr"(clock of life). It will be seen, om the following description, that it s truly a mechanical marvel:

We see, in a glass case, a three-story teeple-shaped clock, four feet wide at he first story, and nine feet high. The movement is placed in the centre f the first story, on four delicate col- mns, within which swings the untir- ng pendulum, which is in the significant form of a beehive. Behind the pendulum there is a picture representing mature manhood—a countryman behind his plough. The four corners are carved, and represent the four periods of life—infancy, youth, manhood, and age. The spaces to the right and left of the clock are ornamented with two oil paintings, representing the spring-time of life (children [illegible] g in the garden), and the autum [illegible] life (gravediggers in a cem [illegible]

The second story con [illegible] tower-like pieces, on the [illegible] of which there are two pictures th [illegible] represent boy hood and early manh [illegible]. In the one a boy is just pus [illegible] his little bark away from the shore. [illegible] stands upright in the boat, and points to the distance; he is about to begin life—"to paddle his own canoe." In the other a young man, who has already made some progress in the journey of life, enters a room in which there is an hourglass, that reminds him of the fleetness of time. On this story there are three guardian angels.

A majestic tower crowns, as third story, the ingenious structure. A cock as a symbol of watchfulness, stands on the top, directly over the portal, which opens the tower on front. On this portal there is a painting which represents the perishableness of earthy things. The entire structure is, in appearance, very like an old gothic castle.

Now, let us see if we can describe the mechanical action of the clock. When it marks the first quarter, the door on the left piece of the second story opens, and we see a child issue from the background, come forward to a little bell, give it one blow, and then disappear. At the second quarter a youth appears, strikes the bell twice, and then disappears; at the third there comes a man in his prime; at the fourth we have a tottering old man, leaning on a staff who strikes the bell four times. Each time the door closes of itself. When the hours are full, the door of the right of the second story opens, and death as a skeleton, scythe in hand, appears, and marks the hour by striking a bell. But it is at the twelfth hour that we have the grand spectacle in the representation of the Day of Judgment. Then, when Death has struck three blows on the little bell the cock on the top of the tower suddenly flaps his wings, and crows in a shrill tone; and, after Death has marked the twelfth hour with his hammer, he crows again twice. Immediately three angels, who stand as guardians in a central position, raise their trumpets with their right hands (in the left they hold swords), and blow a blast toward each of the four quarters of the earth. At the last blast the door of the tower opens, and the resurrected children of the earth appear, while the destroying angel sinks out of sight.

The multitude stand for a moment full of awe and wonder when suddenly, Christ, in all his majesty, descends, surrounded by angels. On his left there is an angel, who holds the scales of justice; on his right another carries the book of life, which opens, to show the Alpha and Omega—the beginning and the end. Christ waves his hand and instantly all the good among the resurrected are separated from the wicked—the former going to the right the latter to the left. The archangel Michael salutes the good, while, on the other side, stands the devil, radiant with fiendish delight—he can hardly wait for the final sentence of those who fall to him, but, in obedience to the command of the central figure, he withdraws. The figure of Christ raises his hand again, with a threatening mien, and the accursed sink down to the realms of his satanic majesty. Then Christ blesses his chosen few, who draw near to him. Finally, we hear a cheerful chime of bells, during which Christ rises, surrounded by his angels, until he disappears, and the portal closes.

We look with amazement on this exhibition of the mechanic's ingenuity; a complete drama is here represented, without the aid of a human hand. And what excites our admiration still more, is the perfection of all the movements; they are steady, calm, and noiseless, with the exception of the threatening gestures of the figure of Christ and the movements of Lucifer, who darts across the scene with lightning rapidity. Of course, the peculiar action of these two figures is intentional on the part of the artist, and adds greatly to the effect.—Appleton's Journal.

No Future Probation.

As to man, there are two periods in which to consider his future: first, that between death and the resurrection; and second, that commencing with the judgment. Is there a possible deliverance for lost men after death and prior to the resurrection? May the sinner who has gone into eternity unwashed and knowing his doom, in some way prepare himself before the judgment day to escape the sentence "Depart," and receive instead the welcome of "Come, ye blessed?" The question is almost its own answer. Certainly the reasons for such an award, as summed [illegible]p by our Savior, cannot hold in his [illegible]se, for his life was false to them all. On the contrary, we find the Scriptures everywhere connecting the present life with the coming of Christ to judge the world, making the hour of our death practically equivalent to the the hour of his coming. We are cautioned to be ready and to watch against things that belong only to this life and not a future state, in order that we may be ready, and to take heed that the day come not on us unawares. We are told that the things which will enter into the account of the judgment, and upon which its issue will be based, are the deeds of this life—the deeds done in the body—and this excludes everything subsequent to death. The impression left upon the mind as we read is that what preparation we would make at all for the future world must be made here.

Very pointed are the words of our Lord to the unbelieving Jews: "Ye shall seek me and shall die in your sins; whither I go ye cannot come;" teaching plainly that they who die in their sins shall never reach the heaven where he has gone. More conclusive still is his statement that a certain sin "hath never forgiveness;" and "eternal damnation," or, adopting the reading accepted by Tregelles, Tischendorf, and Alford, "eternal sin," belongs to him who commits it. Language cannot more explicitly affirm the changelessness of wicked character in the future world.—Christian Advocate.

The Judgment not a Renewal of Probation.

How is it after the judgment day? It is not a day to provide probation, but to administer reward. The Scriptures repeatedly describe that day as one of a public judicial proceeding, with the King as Judge, sitting enthroned upon the judgment seat. The awards are not mere notifications to men of their fate, but rather judicial [illegible]ards, after due and public investig[illegible]n. Its decisions and decrees ar[illegible] judicial, and are publicly pronounced [illegible] he award to one class of men is "e[illegible]al life," to the others "everlasting [illegible]nishment." To the one is said, "Come, ye blessed," to the other, "Depart, ye cursed." These are decrees of the Judge, and they having been pronounced, the court is dissolved; and, for the first time since sin entered the world, God stands fully and fairly vindicated before the universe. Now everybody know that a decree of competent court must stand until it is reversed; and in this case no reversal can be effected without a second assemblage of the great tribunal, which would be a confession that affairs of this world were not entirely disposed of, as was supposed, and the final judgment was no finality. For we cannot conceive that God as Sovereign will in private reserve what he has once publicly pronounced as Judge. The reasons for one public judgment would forever hold good in requiring any subsequent hearing of the cases then disposed of to be attended with equal publicity. Let us be assured there is no possibility of such a turning of the great assize into a farce. The Judgment day's awards will be a terrible finality. Revocable damnation is but a delusive dream.—Christian Advocate.

THE English correspondent of the Interior after insertion of some matters relating to the temporal prospects of the Papacy, adds:

I know not whether it is worth mentioning, and only as the foregoing suggests it, I put it down. Quite a panic, they say, prevails at Rome concerning the dome or cupola of St. Peter's church, sometimes called the eighth hill. It is shaky and inclining from the perpendicular. We are not superstitious, but if it should fall, it will not be the first scene of idolatry, however grand, that has come to destruction. How will the worshipers of art and statues comport themselves then? Besiege the treasuries of the nations to restore its magnificence? Quite as fairly they may do so as begging the world over for Peter's pence to relieve the wants of the old man who lives amidst the untold gold and jewels of the Vatican, a prisoner and homeless amidst hundreds of rooms and halls, and acres upon acres of pleasure gardens.

AT HOME.

It is proposed to erect a printers' monument to Mr. Greeley.

Five Baptist churches in Brooklyn, N. Y., are without pastors.

About three fourths of the Congregationalist and Baptist churches in the land give nothing for missions.

The Indianapolis Journal thinks that if Cain, the first murderer, were living at the present day, he would be the greatest lion and the most popular lecturer of the season.

New York has just sent a man to prison for four years for murdering his wife. Better dispense with punishments altogether than have such farces performed in public.

The total number of dwellings and lodging houses destroyed by the Boston fire is put down at sixty, while 930 business firms had their stores and more or less of their stocks of merchandise destroyed.

By a collision on the Pennsylvania Central railroad on the night of the 5th inst., five persons were killed—Matthew Knowles and G. F. Bacon, of Chicago; W. W. Danz, wife and child, of Green Lake, Wis.

A Japanese gentleman of great enterprise and an immense fortune is looking about in Western Missouri for the right spot to establish an industrial town of his countrymen. He calculates to bring over at first about five hundred men.

Three large living specimens of eyeless fishes, Amblyopsis Spelæus, were received, November 27th, at the Geological Rooms, as a present from Mr. Geo. R. Banning, who collected them from the Gulf of Lost River, near Orleans, in Orange county, Indiana.

In a case of doubtful suspension of life, all that one has to do is to tie a string firmly around the finger of the supposed corpse. If there is the least spark of life left, that is, if the blood circulates at all, the whole finger, from the string to the tip, will gradually turn a bluish red from the engorgement of the veins.

The heat of the Boston fire must have been greater than that at Chicago, for the very brick melted without stint. Instances where granite walls and masses of leather actually fused are numerous. A brick wall on Federal street, between Franklin and High, became liquid and ran down over a considerable space.

A late New York paper suggestively says: The disappearance of two more men is noted in our columns to-day. What is their fate cannot now be told; possibly it never will be. Within a few days several cases of the discovery of the remains of unknown victims of violence have also been reported, and these swell the chapter of a city's mysteries and misseries.

In New York, a careful examination of the criminal records shows that three years imprisonment in the State Prison is the average punishment for killing a man. One hundred and thirty-five cases of homicide have occurred in that city since Jan. 1, 1870; 61 of the participants have been brought to trial, 44 were convicted, and 2 have been executed.

Dowling, the conductor of a freight train which ran into a passenger train near Pittsford, N. Y., recently, was subsequently indicted for manslaughter, and the jury have brought him in "not guilty." They declare, however, that he had no ability to run the train, and no judgment of any account in performing his duties.

Stanley, the Livingstone discoverer, was engaged by Mr. Ruhlman to deliver a course of lectures in Steinway hall, New York, but after he had given two dreary recitals of his adventures in the Central African jungles, he very ignominiously fled the lecture field, leaving his manager to answer the indignant inquiries of ticket holders as best he could.

The boisterous Atlantic, for a week past, has been storm-swept almost beyond precedent. Arrivals at this port and Boston bring reports of severe disasters, two steamers having on board shipwrecked seamen who were rescued in mid ocean. Cable dispatches give information of terrible gales and loss of life on the British coast; and when the full returns are gathered, it will be found that the Autumnal storms have been unusually destructive.—N. Y. Tribune.

The largest engine in the world was put in operation at the Chicago Water-works, a short time ago. It has two thousand four hundred horse-power, and can pump 33,000,000 gallons of water per day. This, with the three engines now in use, gives a supply of 61,000,000 gallons daily, when needed. These engines are covered with an iron roof, experience having demonstrated that wood is too frail to afford efficient protection.

And now a terrible disease has broken out in parts of the South among the hogs. It has but little resemblance to hog cholera, and is much more fatal, never failing to kill in a few hours, and the hogs actually become very offensive even before death. Its first symptom is soreness in the nose, followed frequently by bleeding. Then the tongue commences to swell, protrudes from the mouth and turns black, and the hog dies frequently in an hour or less time after being attacked. No remedy has been discovered that affects it in the least.

The Postmaster General, in answer to a letter of inquiry from the Director of the Post in Prussia, says there are some seven hundred women in our postal service. He adds that these women discharge the duties of their respective positions to the general acceptance of the department, and states that there is a growing public sentiment in the United States favoring the employment of women in clerical and other minor positions in the civil service, the duties of which can be as appropriately and satisfactorily discharged by women as by men.

It is claimed that the immigrants who landed on our shores last year added upward of $285,000,000 to the national wealth, computing their value merely as unskilled laborers. Statistics show, however, that 46 per cent. of the male immigrants have been trained to various pursuits, half of whom are skilled workmen and laborers. The value of these men to the country can hardly be computed.

ABROAD.

The debt of France is $1,000,000,000 more than the debt of Great Britain, and fully double that of the United States.

The Mediterranean steamer Dalmatian, has failed to arrive at Liverpool, and is reported lost.

The turbulent waters of the river Po are again overflowing the entire surrounding country, and at last advices were still rising.

There were terrific gales all along the British Channel on November 23d. Many vessels were wrecked and a large number of lives were lost

The stokers of the gas companies of London are on a strike, consequently the Londoners are patronizing tallow candles, burning fluids, etc. The public places are illuminated with burning lime.

A storm occurred off St. John, New Brunswick, and other points north, November 29th and 30th, causing the wreck of several vessels, and the loss of many lives. In the town of St. John several houses were blown down, among the number the new edifice of the Young Men's Christian Association.

The North of Europe has again suffered from a devastating storm, which, this time, spent its fury in Great Britain The gale was so violent as to dash pedestrians to the ground, while the rain poured in floods, accompanied by lightning. It seems to have been a terrific exhibition of the powers of nature, by land and by sea, both in actions and results.

The mystic planchette which has run its day here and has been almost forgotten, is just now in all its glory in India, only they call the wooden oracle a teapoy. Buddhists, and Brahmists, and Parsees are crazy over it, and merchants are even making their purchases in answer to its prophecies of the market rate a month or two hence. Indeed, one man, whose teapoy told him that he would live but six months longer, is pining away so rapidly in consequence as to be fulfilling its prophecy.

Another sect has appeared in London, called by the irreverent the "Howling Repentants." They are said to "howl at all convenient periods during the day and at two periods during the night." These Howlers are supposed to base their singular ritual upon certain passages in the Old Testament prophets. "The burden of Tyre" and several of the other burdens make mention of this exercise, and these people have undertaken liberally to fulfill the prophetic injunctions.

The great floods in China are attributed to the gradual upheaval of the northeast part of the country, which, it is said, has long been suspected, and it is now established to the satisfation of all the geologists who have visited it. The effect, apparently, has been to cause the Yellow river to change its course, and to deprive the regions through which it passed of the natural means of drainage. As it is the custom in China to hold high officials responsible for whatever calamities occur within their jurisdiction, and as a victim is clearly needed in this case because the disaster has been of frequent ocurrence, it seems not unlikely that Liunchang will be temporarily degraded for neglecting or being unable to prevent the overflow of the pent-up waters.

The extensive conflagration in Upper Thames street, London, which occurred about the same time as the Boston fire seems to have been a narrow escape from as general a destruction of property as that in Boston or Chicago. The buildings destroyed were what is called fire proof; there was no lack of water; the fire department was in excellent condition, and its exertions on the occasion are spoken of in the highest terms of praise. Yet the Pall Mall Gazette holds that the extent of the fire proves that London is as much at the mercy of an agent far beyond the control of any means or appliances for its arrest as the two American cities have proved to be. It makes the broad statement that "fire, to be dealt with properly, must be strangled in its infancy," and refuses to accept the excuse that the fire was not discovered until it was too late to check its progress. It holds that precaution and watchfulness are the only safeguards against the burning of cities, and that one room in a structure like the City Mills, where the London fire originated, was to the rest of the building just as the building itself was to the rest of London.

In conversation with an American correspondent in Paris, ex Dictator Gambetta expressed, very fully his political doctrines. He said he is "not opposed to Thiers speaking in the Assembly. The Assembly itself is not popular in France. It has no right to frame a constitution, and if it should make one the next Assembly would abrogate it." Gambetta favors secular education where broad morality, but not religion, should be taught. He thinks Bismarck has chosen his time for his onslaught on Jesuits with wonderfully skilful statesmanship, for Italy and Austria are with him, while France is helpless. His opinion is that no monarch can rule France hereafter, and that it is best now to administer the republic without a constitution, and without a chamber of peers, or second chamber of any sort. The republicans of France are confident of victory whenever an appeal is made to the polls. Suffrage is sure to remain universal. Great excitement prevails at Chiselhurst. Marshal McMahon controls the army, but will act only in obedience to the Assembly, and not to President Thiers. German reoccupation is certain if fighting occurs. Correspondence has recently passed between Bismarck and Napoleon. German reoccupation will result in the re-establishment of the empire.

From Our English Correspondent.

The Great Fire in Boston—Catholic Loss at Chicago—The Riches of the Denominations—The Pope and the Italian Government—No Altar! No Cross—Romish Relics—Jesuits—Letters.

News of the great fire at Boston has reached this country, and is published in all the daily papers. It causes deep and visible tokens of sorrow, and the feeling that grows all over the land is a strong argument that a brotherly and feeling sympathy yet exists in the English heart for the people of the North on the shore. The other night, as I went out of my house, two men were passing the door, when one said to the other, with unmistakable pathos, "Poor Boston!" And this sadness is shared in by all. We learn also, we are losers (in our insurance offices,) of about $5,000,000 by the conflagration. After the Chicago fire, many business men, noticing the strength of the English insurance companies and their promptitude in settling claims, transferred their assurances to them, they readily accepting the risks. This great loss to the companies however has depreciated the value of policies, and policy-holders are counseled by the "leader" of an extensively circulated paper, to inquire into the tariff for the insurance of foreign property, as the risks are considered to be greater than home interests, and the rates, it is ruled, should be proportionately higher,

Just at this time, also, an estimate of the cash value of the loss sustained by the Catholics in the great Chicago fire, is sent out to the world. We learn from the statistics, that their loss in "churches, institutes, residences, schools, etc," is almost definitely fixed at $1,000,000, on which only $37,500 were received as insurance.

Christ was poor. He was born in a stable, cradled in a manger, worked as a carpenter, went out one morning without a breakfast and looked for a few figs in a tree to satisfy his hunger; had to work a miracle to get a piece of money to pay a tax with; only had one suit of clothes; "had not where to lay his head" But his so called followers are rich. According to the census for 1870, the Methodists of the United States are the richest of the religious denominations, and hold property worth nearly $70,000,000. The Roman Catholics are worth $60,000,000. The Presbyterians own churches worth about 48,500,000. The Baptists, $41,500,000. The Episcopalians, $36,500,000. The Congregationalists and Lutherans are not reported. Probably $300,000,000 would not cover the value of church property in the United States.

The Times, the aristocratic organ of England, has printed a very pointed and suggestive article on "The Pope and the Italian Government." It is so unconsciously remarkable as a comment on prophecy, that I have tacked it on to my events of this week. Here it is:

> Pius IX began his reign twenty-six years ago, in the full strength of manhood, as the Liberal Pope, and one of the most powerful sovereigns in the world. He is now an old man, without an inch of territory, and conscious that he has lost the good opinion of the free governments and nations of the world, as he has lost his temporal authority. So long as he lives, the one idea and the one object of the court he rules will be retaliation on the Italian government and all who abetted it. Around the Pope are men who share his animosities, and though, no doubt, there are many in the highest rank who see that the past must be accepted, and that the true policy is a frank reconciliation with Italy and a new departure on the basis of free spiritual action, yet these either think it best to be silent or are overborne by the old Pope and his more vehement supporters. The consequence is that the change effected in the balance of power by the Franco German war has been viewed by Rome, not as regards its great and general European effects, but as regards the chance of the Pope to re establish his temporal authority. It is difficult to conceive that shrewd men experienced in politics should cherish such hopes; but there can be no doubt that the Pope and his friends still believe it possible to expel Victor Emmanuel from his new possessions. To these dreams the French have given a sort of vague encouragment, which has been enough to procure them friends among the partisans of the Temporal Power, who catch, like drowning men at straws. France, under the Empire, did, it is true, strike the first blow at the Papacy; but the Emperor, it is assumed, saw his error; the Empress and her following were truly devout, and the Sovereign of France showed himself the eldest son of the Church by maintaining the garrison which so long preserved the Holy City from desecration. The last aggression of the Italian Government followed close on the disasters of France; the revolution at Rome was the after-shock of the catastrophe at Sedan. The French garrison at Rome had been recalled to fight against Prussia; the king of Prussia was on terms of friendship with the Italian Government—he had been its ally in 1866, and, in spite of his recent letter to the Pope, he was vehemently suspected of encouraging the last and crowning aggression. These considerations are at the basis of the ultramontane hostility to the German empire. The chiefs of the Church cherish the illusion that France will some day, and in some manner, interfere to undo what has been done in Italy. The Monarchical parties in France, with their confident talk, and the politicians generally, with their phrase of "Catholic policy," have given strength to these anticipations. No clear-sighted man will doubt that they are destined to complete disappointment. Whatever France may become, she will be always too republican in spirit for the task which the ultramontanes expect of her.

Pity and pray for a poor ritualist who writes to the Church Times concerning the Carlish Oratory, and who says: "Sir, we have no altar, cross, or candle stick for the above." Why not be men and call a table a table and not an altar? And as for sticking up a cross in church, all who serve Christ and follow him faithfully, will find cross enough to bear in their lives, as they glory in the cross, without being able to afford time for superstitious adoration of a piece of carved wood! My heart is sick of such "religion," it is so poor, hollow, and puerile! "No altar!" Thank God, we have ever an altar, and our Jesus serves at it: we know and own no other. "No cross!" But the cross we trust in was reared on Calvary, and the Victim died there on our behalf. And now we sing:

"My faith looks up to thee,
Thou Lamb of Calvary—
Savior divine!"

He was offered once, and we believe in no further offering. But, if we are sharers of his sorrows and sufferings, we shall find our life one of cross and crucifixion. Away with all other altars, crosses, and sacrifices besides these.

Purgatory is a venerable dogma of Catholicity. And here is a scrap cut from the Universe on this purgatory. It is captioned "Particular Devotion to the Holy Souls in Purgatory." It reads thus:

> Sir,—By your kindness on former occasions by inserting a few lines on the above subject for the Purgatorian Society of this church, you have been the means of spreading the great charity. I presume your kindness in giving space to this letter in your truly Catholic journal, will be the means of further extending this charity this month of the holy souls in purgatory—a month dear to many of them; for how many of your readers have dear friends in purgatory and would be happy to know how easily a great deal can be done for their relief by becoming members of the Purgatory Society of St. Nicholas, Francis Street, Dublin? Ten masses are offered up every month—that is 120 Masses in the year—for their departed friends and relatives. To become members they have only to send their name and the small subscription of one penny per week to the secretary, or to yours, &c.,

This is the work of the Purgatory Society, to mutter prayers for money. We recollect, while writing, a sensible piece of advice given by an elder to a young minister: Let dead sinners alone, and try to save live ones." This purgatory, with prayers for the dead, is a shameful imposture. But then, people love to be imposed on, and only admire the men who attribute extravagant healing properties to their pills, nostrums, etc., as in the case of the Purgatorian Society, profess to "do a great deal" for the relief of their tormented friends in the intermediate state between heaven and hell, by their prayers. Such doctrines are abominably disgusting; but no more so, and no more unreasonable, than those of protestanism, which fights for what is an error even on the face of it—that dead men are alive while they are dead. It puts me in a very odd position to have to argue with sensible men such a proposition as the following: When a man is dead he is dead.

That Mr. James Grant, who has taken up cudgels to beat annihilations, (as he pleases to call them,) into non existence or submission has opened the columns of the Christian Standard to correspondence, and one letter for that department is titled, "Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth." The writer of it makes marks in the following direction:

> Sir,—One lamentable and most saddening fact seems admitted on all hands. The church, the real church of Christ, is just now suffering from her Lord's absence and from the Holy Spirit's withdrawal. The present time may be a time of efflorescence, of much stir in "revivals" here, and "ritualism" there, but it is amidst all this noise, a time of declension, of dearth, of falling away. This is confessed on all hands. Not long since a writer in the English Independent, the organ of the Congregationalists, said:
> > Go where you will, the same cry meets you. No spiritual life! Handsome buildings, perhaps splendid preaching, superior singing, but no soul power. No one disputes the fact, however varied may be the speculations as to the cause.... Wesleyanism rejoices over new chapels, but mourns over dead souls. Evangelical Episcopalians lose ground everywhere. Superstition, Romish and Anglican, advances upon the citadel, and the garrison is benumbed with spiritual coldness.
> In like manner, at the late meeting of the Baptist Association, one of the speakers adverted in tones of deep regret, to the evident declension going on, both in that, and in most, or in all, the other denominations.

The editor backs up this letter with an editorial in which he writes:

> A conference of Baptist ministers, at which a large number of the leading men belonging to that denomination were present, was held a fortnight ago at Manchester. We are told in the published reports of the proceedings of that conference, that all the speakers mourned the decrease of conversions which had marked the past year.

Doubtless these facts are as "true as the gospel," at least we know they answer to the prophecies. If we should be making marginal references of Scriptural parallel passages we should put an asterisk to "falling away," in the first paragraph and refer to those texts which declare there shall be a falling away ere the return of Christ.

Jesuits from Germany are pouring into England, Ireland, and Scotland, and it is feared they will bring their moral mud and filth with them. These incursions are naturally awakening the long-sighted politician and dubious protestant to a sense of our peril, as a people, this having these foreigners, fomentors of discord and political intrigues, in our midst. We learn that a rich lady in Liecestershire has purchased a house in that county for the accommodation of seventy of the above order; arrangements are in course of completion for the reception of eighty of their number in Inverness-shire, one of the northern counties of Scotland; thirty have arrived in Dublin, and a second batch of one hundred and thirty more. This makes in total three hundred and ten, and it is possible many more may have found, or may find, their way to this country. Scarcely a greater curse could fall on any country.

Tennessee.

Perhaps a few words from Tennessee would be of interest to those who love to hear from the scattered ones. God is blessing his truth in East Tennessee. One year ago, under the labors of Hastings and myself, a church was formed of some thirty members. In September last I came again, and we number forty to-day, with others coming in. But here, as in other places, truth meets with opposition, and in order to crush it I was called upon to meet a "champion debater," and defend the doctrine that had been preached as best I could. I went forward, praying and trusting in God. After four days the debate closed on Friday night, and on the next Sabbath two were buried in baptism. As to the result of the debate, doors are being opened in all directions and truth is getting a strong hold on the people.

What can be done by us as a people? It seems as though each ought to pray "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Work enough for all and but little time to do it. Pray for the dear ones in the South. They have much to contend against. Where are God's servants who feel the war is on them? Enter the field; and let us work as best we can. The eleventh hour—night will soon be upon us.

H. DAVIS.

From Wm. S. Payton.

I am still contending for the truth, and I praise the name of the Lord for his goodness in leading me to the light, that I might see the difference between the faith once delivered to the saints, and the traditions of men, received from other sources. I am receiving a goodly share of reproach for choosing the way of truth. How truly the apostle said, many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of. "Oh! then, let us lift up our heads and rejoice, that we are accounted worthy to receive persecutions falsely for the name of Jesus, knowing that great is the reward in heaven. Brethren, let us keep ourselves in the love of God looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life.

In July last I preached at Stark's S. H. in Scott Co., Ind. I spoke three times to a goodly number, not one of them ever having heard an Adventist. At the close of the meeting one noble soul, an old man in his sixty-ninth year, came out and took a firm stand on the side of truth. In September I visited them again, which resulted in two confessing the Lord; and on Friday evening before the third Lord's day in October I commenced preaching to them again. Br. G. W. Green came to help me on Saturday night and staid over Sunday, giving three stirring discourses such as are calculated to gladden the hearts of true believers. Our meeting closed this time with three additions, and a good prospect for the next meeting.

The people in that section appear anxious to learn the truth. They are kind, sociable, and with all manifest a spirit of Christian love and fellowship that indicates a strong desire to learn the way that leadeth unto life. May the Lord help them to walk worthy of the Christian vocation, that they may receive an inheritance in the kingnom when Jesus comes.

From N. C. Miller, Sullivan Co., Mo.

Yesterday (Nov. 24) a few firm Advent believers assembled at Br. James H. Sloan's residence. I tried to expound Mat. 26: 31, 32. A glorious time. Then the following resolution was adopted by seven of us:

WHEREAS, We believe that all mankind are as the grass that withereth and returneth to the earth from whence it came, and outside of Christ we have no immortality; and,

WHEREAS, We believe the chain of prophecy concerning events preceding the glorious coming of our Life-giver is quite fulfilled; therefore,

Resolved, That we organize the Advent Christian church at J. H. Sloan's, in Sullivan Co., Mo.

Seven names were enrolled, and our officers elected. We are few but strong. I am not afraid to meet the Devil with such soldiers by my side. Why, bless God! old mother Sloan declared that she believed "she would live to see King Jesus' chariot wheels roll;" and she can hardly walk. Brethren, hasten Jesus on with your prayers; cry day and night, O, Jesus come! Let thy thunder-trumpet sound to wake the dead.

We have four churches now in this part of our infant Conference. Take courage, brethren in Iowa. When you meet again you'll have an increase. Pray for me and mine. My sword is unsheathed, and if Jesus gives me strength I'll press the conflict to the gates of the enemy. No surrender! Victory or death, is my motto. Come over and help us, brethren. Our hearts and houses are open to you all. The people are earnest to hear one of our former preachers. Will Sr. Mansfield please write me if she can come this way? If she cannot come, will not another visit us?

From Amos Sanford, Columbus, Kansas.

I notice the request of the new editor of THE TIMES for the prayers of its readers for its prosperity, to which I heartily respond amen. So mote it be. We are holding our ground at this place and struggling for the truth. At our last prayer meeting six were added to the church, which makes our whole number eighteen, where there was not one Adventist when Eld. Himes came here first in January, 1871. The church at Bero is composed of seventeen members, who are alive and strong in "the faith once delivered to the saints." Immaterialists and Spiritists continue to make war upon us, but with "the sword of the Spirit," we hope to fight our way into the kingdom.

From Andrew Organ, (an aged Disciple,) Fillmore Co., Minn.

I want to say a few words about our glorious faith, the faith once delivered to the saints, and now more fully brought to light in these last days. I bless and praise God that he has led me to see the harmony and consistency of his word at this late day. I feel to praise God that he has raised up faithful witnesses to the truth. May God bless the dear brethren and sisters who are engaged in preaching "the present truth." I am living in the midst of the enemies and haters of this precious doctrine, and they are all professors of religion. I am often grieved in my heart to see the indifference manifested on the subject. But then, the Scriptures must be fulfilled. May God bless you all, is the prayer of your unworthy brother in Christ.

From L. F. Cole, Oneida, Ill.

We have just closed a protracted effort here, with a result of six baptized, and eight added to the church. Br. G. W. Hurd, and Sr. Alice E. Rathbun were here laboring about three weeks. We feel much encouraged. The Lord has indeed blessed us. A good number are still under conviction, and there are others that ought to unite with us but do not see the way clear at present. It seems like "gleaning grapes from the topmost boughs," in these perilous times, in our labor for perishing ones, to gather them to Christ. May God still bless is my prayer.

The Children of the Church.

"Give a dog a name and kill him." It is a rough phrase, but it lives because it embodies a vital truth. Nor is the truth confined to dogs, nor even primarily spoken of dogs; but, as Paul might say, it was written altogether for our sakes.

A little child is born, innocent of theology, theoretically unacquainted with God, absolutely ignorant, and practically helpless in mind, body, and estate. If his parents are thieves, murderers, adulterers, profane swearers, drunkards, liars, there is a sad probability that he will become like them. If they fear God and walk in his ways, is there not a probability that the child will accompany them? Is it not their duty to assume that he will?

It seems to me a real and serious defect in our orthodox polity or doctrine—whichever it is—that we give the children of the church no advantage over the children of this world. On the contrary, they are almost under a disadvantage. The little victims of the slums and alleys will be lost, indeed; but their ignorance will be a mitigation of their punishment, whereas the children of the church will suffer the added poignancy of the sermons, the songs, the prayers, the teachings which they have heard and withstood. We assume not the non-transmissibility of moral qualities, but the transmissibility of immoral qualities. In Adam we involuntarily died; but in Christ none are made alive except by their own act. The sins of the parents are visited upon the children; but their virtues stop with themselves. The children of parents who are friends of God must go through the same processes of conviction of sin and conversion to holiness, as the children of those who are haters of God, or unacquainted with his name. Mental culture changes the plane of life; but moral culture permits each generation to begin where its predecessor began. Every child, alike of Christian as of heathen parents, is born under the divine displeasure.

Did my ears deceive me? I was at a council convened for the purpose of inquiring into the disputed faith of a brother suspected of heretical tendencies. A paper was read in which he presented his creed; and in this paper he announced his belief that we were all "born under the divine displeasure." He was ejected from the council; though I cannot affirm that this clause of his creed was, as it should have been, the immediate disposing cause.

What is meant by being born under the divine displeasure? Which does sin, the child or his parents? When people who are thriftless, shiftless, incapable of taking care of themselves, quarrelsome, unprincipled, and wretched, introduce into the world a living soul, for whom they are unable to make any adequate provision, one can understand that they should incur the divine displeasure. But when a husband and wife who love each other become the delighted parents of a child, for whose comfort, happiness, and welfare they are able and eager to provide, why should the divine displeasure alight on them? What law have they violated, what crime committed?

Or is it the poor little baby with whom God is angry? Is there any council, or any collection of grown men who will venture to affirm that any sentient being in the heavens above, or the earth beneath, can view with a harsher feeling than profound compassion this helpless, unconscious little creature, born to its certain troubles and to its only possible joys? The great God displeased with a baby! And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them; and when he had taken him in his arms, he said unto them: "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." How many heretics must agree, how many councils must announce that we are born under the divine displeasure to neutralize the impression produced by Jesus Christ calling, fondling, caressing, blessing the little children?

If he is not displeased with the father and mother for being the parents of a child, nor with the child for being born, with whom is he displeased? Not with the general system under which such things happen, for it is his own institution. The mother might show good cause for displeasure; but that an Omnipotent Being should have ordered the issues of life just as they are, and then be in a state of constant displeasure with them seems absurd.

I suppose the words are susceptible of some interpretation or explanation which shall render them intelligible and acceptable to the rational mind; but, in their simple, natural meaning, can the rational mind do anything but reject them? As such words are used in the common language of the earth, they seem utterly false, cruelly derogatory to the divine character, and cruelly adapted to widen the breach between man and his Maker. So far is it from being true that we are born under the divine displeasure, I should rather say the one thing God cannot be angry with us for is our being born. Little children are under his peculiar patronage. Even when he is justly displeased with parents for their inconsiderate, selfish, wicked introduction of a fresh life to fresh sorrow he can have only the deepest pity and love for the wretched little victim. And for the rest, for the honest, virtuous, thrifty Christian parents, to whom every child is a new incentive to love, a new development of grace, a new hold on life and hope, are not their children born under the very smile of God? Sees he not in every opening life the perfect working of his plans, a fresh unfolding of power, another center of happiness?

Teach children from their infancy that they are carnally minded, at enmity with God, and that they need reconciliation with him, and, doubtless, after a while, your teachings will be literally true. But why should not children be brought up from the beginning on good terms with their Maker? They are not naturally hostile to him. So far as I have seen children, they are naturally reverent, dutifully and even affectionately disposed toward God. They do not need reconciliation to him, for they have never quarreled with him. They need constant enlightenment, constant repression, it may be, and encouragement; for they are weak and wild. But surely their dutiful and affectionate disposition toward God, ought to be recognized and cultivated. It should be assumed at the outset that they are his children, consecrated to him by the word, the deed, the very nature of their parents. He is their most loving parent, whom they love as fast as they learn. They will often sin against him, as they often sin against their father and mother. But from the little outbursts of childish rebellion, impatience, or fatigue, we do not infer a state of continuous hatred to the mother. Why should we infer a state of hatred to God? The anger, and the petulance, even the disobedience, are not the rule, but the deviations from the rule. They are not because the child hates his parents, but because swift and sudden temptation overbears his sense of duty. All the way along, right through the thick of his worst actions, his love maintains its strong and steady current, strengthening with his strength, growing clear, and calm, and pure as he increases in wisdom and stature, and never losing itself when it mingles with the waters of the river of life.

So let the little child be taught to love God—not against, but in unison with his nature. Let him be taught to consider himself a Christian from the beginning—a little Christian, to be sure, but a little Christian; not a little pagan, not a little worldling. His lapses into sin—that is, into crossness and lies and disobedience and untidiness and carelessness—are beneath his standard, against his principles, contrary to his designs. He shall be helped by prayer and praise, and punishment, if need be, to overcome his faults; but he shall not be drummed out of the ranks on account of them. We, his elders, are cross and careless. We tell lies, and we are selfish and impatient and inconsiderate; but we account ourselves Christians for all that. Shall we be harder on the little men and women who stand in their little places and do deeds of heroism in the way of self-culture and repression of bad habits, who make little martyrs of themselves and become little saints over their dolls and hoops and tarts? Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven.—Gail Hamilton, in Independent.

Accounts of Christ's Resurrection Harmonized.

There may be those who see apparent contradictions in the several accounts of the resurrection as given by the evangelists, and are unable to harmonize them. These contradictions are seeming rather than real. It is to be expected that independent writers will mention different events or particulars when giving an account of the transaction; and it is only by taking into consideration all the different statements that we get a full account or description of the events narrated. Some diversity of statement is evidence that the writers did not make up a story which they agreed to narrate; while an agreement in all matters which can be deemed essential, though some mention particulars which others do not, is evidence that they are describing events which actually took place. Bearing these things in mind, we will try to harmonize the statements of the evangelists respecting the resurrection of Christ.

1. Early on Sunday morning certain women repaired to the grave of Jesus to embalm his body. Spices were, indeed put hastily about his body when he was buried on Friday evening by Joseph of Arimathea, but these women did not know it. Or they might have thought the embalming incomplete. A few may have come in the morning to see if the tomb was accessible, with the intention of bringing spices as soon as they could make use of them. They began preparations for embalming the body on Friday evening, but rested on the Sabbath, and early on Sabbath morning proceeded to accomplish their purpose. All the gospels agree in this matter.

2. The stone upon the grave was rolled away by an earthquake; "for an angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it." Mark says the women queried while on the way, who should roll away the stone for them, but on their arrival they found that it had been rolled away. They did not witness the earthquake; it occurred before they arrived at the grave. That was probably the moment at which Christ arose. The guards saw the angel roll the stone away and sit upon it; whereupon they fainted or fell into a swoon. The women did not see the angel sitting upon the stone, but afterward in the tomb; though it might be inferred from Matthew that they saw him sitting on the stone.

3. As soon as Mary Magdalene saw that the stone had been rolled away, she hastened to inform Peter and John; but the other women remained and went into the sepulcher. There they saw an angel who told them of Christ's resurrection, and that his disciples might see him in Galilee. Mark says they saw a young man on the right side. It is highly probable that the angel had the appearance of a young man, and that he did not retain the remarkable radiant appearance as when the guard beheld him rolling away the stone, and sitting upon it. One might call him an angel, and the other a young man and yet both speak truly. Luke says two men stood by in shining raiment, while Mark says one young man was sitting on the right side. It is not uncommon for the Scripture writers to speak of an important fact without noting the number of men connected with it. Every careful reader of the Scriptures must have noticed this. Matthew could truly say that an angel was present in the sepulcher and spoke of the resurrection of Christ, without contradicting the fact that two men was present. Mark says the angel was sitting, while Luke says the angel was standing. They might have been in a sitting posture at first; but after the women came in they might have risen; so one might have represented them as sitting, and another as standing, and not contradict each other, for each would naturally speak of them in that condition in which they were recalled to mind. And there is no law of the mind which would compel all the witnesses to recall the angels as occupying the same position.

4. The women left the sepulcher to inform the apostles of Christ's resurrection. The distance was considerable, and they did not go the same way by which Peter and John were hastening to the grave, else they would have met them. The two apostles examined the grave, finding it empty, the linen cloths and napkins laying by, and then returned home, filled with wonder and amazement. Soon after Mary Magdalene returned to the grave and remained there for some time alone. Looking into the tomb she saw two angels sitting, one at the head and the other at the foot where Jesus had lain. They asked her why she wept. Her reply was, because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him. On turning round she saw Jesus himself, and supposing him to be the gardener, she asked where he had laid the body. Jesus called her by name, when she recognized him. She then made known the fact of Jesus resurrection to the disciples. Thus all the facts mentioned by the several evangelists are made to harmonize with each other, without even the shadow of contradiction.—Star in the West.

A Choice of Evils.

The Independent looks upon hype-Calvanism and Universalism as two evils, the latter being the least. We give its remarks to our readers, for each can make his own comments:

We do not endorse either of the errors referred to. We regard them both as evil in their tendencies; but there is sometimes a choice between evils, and our choice is directly opposite to that of the Congregationalist. We do not believe in Universalism, because it does not seem to accord with the Scripture, and because the best philosophy we can muster agrees in this matter with the teachings of Scripture. And, if it is not true that all men are to be saved, whether or no, then we think men ought to be told that it is not true. But the duty of telling them so is painful. The doctrine of the eternal punishment of the wicked is not to us a "precious" one, it is one of the saddest of mysteries. We wish that we could find the arguments of the Universalists true. We should like to believe them; but we cannot.

The doctrine that God's "righteousness" requires him to consider all the children of men guilty of the sin of Adam, and punishable for that sin, affects us very differently. We do not want to believe any such doctrine as that. To believe in a God who has a right to punish a man eternally for an act which he never had any part in, and which was done several thousands of years before he was born, is to us not only impossible but monstrous. To ask any man to love or worship such a God as that is to insult his understanding. The doctrine squarely contradicts every testimony of consciousness and strikes at the root of all morality. If a man knows anything at all, he knows that he cannot be to blame for what happened before he was born. If there is one thing absolutely certain in this world, it is that guilt is not transferable. A doctrine which cuts right across our surest ethical conditions is not a doctrine whose "leanings" are safe. Nevertheless, owing to what Cousin calls that "good dose of inconsistency which man almost always prescribes for philosophy," those who hold this doctrine are often among the sweetest of saints and the most winning of preachers. The tendencies of their theology, so far as this doctrine is concerned, are simply horrible; but other truths which they hold, along with this, help to neutralize its influence, and the divine life abiding in them, which is better than all doctrines, is mightier to build than their heresy to overthrow.

This is a principle for which we demand an application in another direction. We do not ask that any error be endorsed; we do not think that it is a matter of small consequence what a minister believes; we only think that the sound principle upon which Congregational councils have proceeded in their dealing with one sort of heresy may be safely applied to another heresy, of a much less dangerous character.

What's in a Name.

We are not of those who hanker after these words and phrases that have become narrowed and degraded from ecclesiastical usage. The word "orthodox" was once the opposite of "heterodox," and meant "sound in the faith;" but being monopolized and applied by certain sects, with characteristic modesty to themselves, it came to mean sound in the partialist faith. In New England, where the Congregationalists formerly had their own way, they applied the term to themselves in particular, so that to-day if we speak of an orthodox church we are properly supposed to refer to a Congregational church. It does not greatly matter; that church is no stronger because of its monopoly of a once good word, nor are the other churches weaker. The word Pharisee had once a good meaning; it was a term of honor. But no one cares now to be called a Pharisee, because the original meaning of the word was lost, and another meaning given it by the ostentation and hypocrisy of the sect which monopolized it. Neither do we care to be called "orthodox" in current religious phrase, for the words suggest doctrines and beliefs which we utterly abhor.

A similar degradation is overtaking the word "evangelical." Its strict meaning is "relating to good news," but it is being appropriated by a class of churches that believe in almost the worst news possible. We are sorry to see so good a word debased, but since they are so persistent in claiming it, and it is quite generally conceded, let it go. Calling their bad news good news will not make it so. Nobody will be greatly deceived. "Evangelical" will lose its original meaning—has already lost it in a great measure—and take its place, humiliated, and shorn of all its previous excellence, by the side of its degraded companion "orthodox."—Star in the West.

Our Young Folks.

Mr. Nobody.

I know a funny little man,
As quiet as a mouse,
Who does the mischief that is done
In everybody's house.
There's no one ever sees his face,
And yet we all agree
That every plate was cracked
By Mr. Nobody.

'Tis he who always tears our books,
Who leaves our doors ajar;
He pulls the buttons from our shirts,
And scatters pins afar.
The squeaking door will always squeak,
For, prithee, don't you see,
We leave the oiling to be done
By Mr. Nobody?

The finger marks upon the doors
By none of us are made;
We never leave the blinds unclosed,
To let the curtains fade.
The ink we never spill; the boots
That lying round you see,
Are not our boots, they all belong To Mr. Nobody!

How Frankie Killed the Lion.

"What about the famous lantern, my boy?" asked grandpa Warren, as he put his arm about Frankie's plump little waist, and drew him nearer to his side.

"Oh! grandpa," cried Frankie, his handsome face flushing, "I had quite forgotten the lantern. It's up stairs, in the old work-room."

"Quite forgotten it." said grandpa, in his turn astonished, as he brought his gold-rimed glasses to bear upon the bright upturned face. "Why, I think I never saw a little fellow more earnest about that same lantern. I remember he intended to have it all ready by Christmas to show in the parlor. Well, I am really surprised."

Frankie looked down somewhat abashed.

"I did try," he said, softly, fumbling in his pockets. But the slides were so hard, and I broke one glass, and papa brought me some new toys; and so you see I got interested in them," he added, brightly. "But really grandpa, it was very hard."

"Ah! I see," said Mr. Warren, looking thoughtfully in the fire. "It was the lion," and shook his head and sighed.

"The lion, grandpa?"

"Yes, dear, that dreadful lion that I have known to conquer so many; to eat them up, my boy—eat them up."

"What can you mean, grandpa,?" asked Frankie, now quite sartled.

"Have you never heard papa read in the Bible, 'The slothful man sayeth there is a lion in the way,'" asked Mr. Warren.

"I don't remember. What does it mean grandpa?"

Grandpa did not answer the question, but went on to say:

"Some time ago I was talking with a certain lady in this house, being at the time in a famous room, which a young gentleman of my acquaintance calls his work-room; and there I saw a great many good intentions, that I suppose, when they were begun, were expected to be finished performances by and by. There was a cart completed all but one wheel; there was a little chair begun for somebody's little sister, that laid helplessly upon two legs; there was a set of ninepins commenced and abandoned."

"Oh grandpa!" cried Frankie, with red cheeks; "you were up in my room."

"And the lady told me that a certain little son of her's was always ready to begin new work on new things; but very seldom finished any one of them properly. Then I felt badly, for I was sure the lion had got hold of my dear little grandson, and that by and by he would get the upper hands of him completely and crunch out all his usefulness and make a miserable man of him."

Grandpa's tones were very serious; and Frankie looked down, growing redder and redder, as he fingered the bright brass buttons of his new suit.

"I did mean to have the lantern all done by Christmas; but you see—well—there were so many other things; and—and I—" Frankie could get no further, but stared at the blazing red coal-fire, and thought to himself that it was really too bad for grandpa to talk that way, when he had been trying to do so much. It was enough to hear mamma's sage talk; but when grandpa came he expected to have so much fun!—nothing else only fun!

Presently grandpa began to talk about Nep, the great farm dog. Frankie remembered him; he was a little, brown, curly mat of a thing, only a few weeks old, when he had last seen him. Now grandfather told how large and handsome he had grown; how paitent and docile he was, so that Nettie, Frankie's younger cousin, could sit on his back and drive him all round the yard.

"Is he as big as a lion?" asked Frankie, gravely. He could not get the thought of that dreadful animal out of his head.

"Almost," grandpa said, with a smile, stroking his long gray beard; "and Cousin Dan is making a capital little wagon and a harness for Nep, so that Nettie can go riding."

"I suppose Cousin Dan finishes things," said Frankie, thoughtfully.

"Always!" replied grandpa Warren, biting his lips. "Dan always finishes things."

"But he is a man," continued Frank.

"He always did finish things," replied grandpa. "I have known him to work paitiently at a little toy for Nettie for weeks, when he had but little else but a pen-knife to work with. It's a good habit, that," mused grandpa.

Frankie still looked thoughtful; but presently went off to play

The next day, as grandpa Warren was sitting by the fire, in the great arm-chair, Frankie ran up to him, with shining eyes.

"Grandpa," he almost shouted, "grandpa, I'm going to kill the lion! My lion, I mean."

"Really, I am glad to hear that," said grandpa Warren, putting his paper aside. "That's better news than I find here."

"Yes, I've begun at him this morning; went right straight up-stairs. 'Now, says I, 'Mr. Lion, I'm going to take you in hand.' So I went at the little cart; and here it is, all finished, every bit. Look!"

Grandpa's eyes sparkled as he examined the toy. The work was quite perfect.

"Don't you believe I've cut off one of his fore-paws?" cried the young hero, with great satisfaction.

"I think you have lamed him to some purpose," said grandpa.

"And now," exclaimed Frankie, with renewed gusto, "I'm going to put out his eyes.'

"Both of them?" queried grandpa.

"Every one of them. Don't you think by the time I've done my lantern he will be pretty shaky?"

"I should say so; quite incapable of doing much mischief, if he has no feet and no eyes. You might keep him then as a sort of reminder. It's a great thing to conquer such a foe, my boy."

"I never knew I had a lion before," said Frankie chuckling. "But I'll look out for him in future; see if I don't."

Grandpa gazed after the boy, as he went off, with tears in his old eyes and joy in his heart. It had always been a sorrow to him that Frankie had seemed so fickle—losing too soon the enthusiasm with which he was forever beginning new ventures. Now it seemed probable that he needed to sorrow no more, for things were looking up in Frankie's work-shop, decidedly. The chair intended for little sister was not abandoned till it could stand as straight and steady as she did; the magic lantern slides were all brought out, and with a few suggestions from grandpa, finished quite elegantly; indeed, there was nothing there that did nor suffer a change, from the broken pap-dish he had once resolved to mend to a handsome hickory cane for grandpa, which was presented with a flourish.

"Oh, ho! I suppose you intend that for me to kill my lions with," laughed grandpa.—Independent.

BULLARD—In Coral, McHenry Co., Ill., Nov. 18, 1872 Isabella Bullard, aged 14 years.

Our young sister was converted about one year ago, and greatly rejoiced in the blessed hope. She was ever ready to speak for Jesus, while she testified a cheerful heart in her songs of praise and faithful prayers. Death had no terrors for her. During her sickness she would say: "I am trusting in Jesus. I shall reign with him when he comes." Thus she endured, faithful to the end.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an inquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R.," running from Chicago through Galesburg to Burlington, has achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Route to the West. At Burlington it connects with the great Burlington Route which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Chicago on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the C. B. & Q and Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

Wait.

Wait, Christian, wait;
That crown which hath no fading
Is thine when only all thy work is done:
Rest thou in him who giveth, not upbraiding,
And go thou bravely till thy race is run.
Not smooth the way perchance thy feet are taking.
Haply few sunbeams glint athwart thy sky;
Look upward, Christian, for the morn is breaking.
The shadows flee apace, thy rest is nigh.
Wait, Christian, wait.

Wait, Christian, wait;
Live only for thy Master;
Let the world guage thee blindly as it please,
Misjudge thy hidden work, count gain disaster,
A greater than the world shall reckon these.
Hidden in Christ, thy simple daily doing
Hath glory far exceeding earthly store;
Humble and mean and poor to earthly viewing,
But for this work God setteth wide the door.
Wait, Christian, wait.

Wait, Christian, wait;
Thy life is one of giving,
Not here the crown, not here the victor's palm
Christ lives for thee, be thou for others living.
Rest followeth labor, after conflict, calm.
Give unto others with no after-thinking
From others aid some good desired to gain;
Give them for Christ's sake, all thy self hood sinking [illegible]
For him and to him through thy joy or pain
Wait, Christian, wait.

Wait, Christian, wait;
For whom he loves he chastens,
Purest the gold which passeth fiercest test;
The will that works his love [illegible] hastens,
[illegible] leads and holds thee, his own time is best
The eternal years are guarding all thy treasure,
The [illegible] one by one,
That [illegible] which hath no bound or [illegible]
Lies just beyond where now thy way doth [illegible]
Wait, [illegible], wait

An Exposition of Matthew Ch. 24.

"And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another." (v. 10.) I understand this to have reference to the age of the church subsequent to the Papal power, distinguished by the Papal Inquisition; because there is such a fitness in the language employed in the prophecy to the facts in history relating to that institution which has so profusely shed the blood of the saints of the Most High.

It is very evident that the Papal tribulation is to be divided into two parts, one of which comes under the special superintendence of the Holy Office of the Inquisition, as it is called. And this may be seen by reference to the opening of the fourth and fifth seals; one bringing to view a tribulation from the establishment of the Inquisition until the commencement of the signs which are to precede the second advent of Christ.

When the sixth seal was opened the same events are brought to view of which Matthew speaks as taking place immediately "after the tribulation of those days," indicative of the near approach of the end. But as illustrative of the prophecy "Many shall be offended and hate, and betray one another," having its fulfillment in the Romish Inquisition, we will subjoin the testimony of Dr. Achilli, who was once a functionary in the church of Rome, who in an account of his renunciation of Romanism, has made himself an object of inquistorial hate. In his life and experience he has furnished us facts of a most striking character. He says:—

"The Inquisition declares that in the matters of offence against religion, it is the positive and bounden duty of every one to become an accuser. Children may and ought to accuse parents, wives their husbands, and servants their masters. The law is in accordance with the decrees of several popes, that whosoever becomes acquainted with any offence against religion, whether from his own knowledge or hearsay, is bound, within fifteen days, to bring forward his accusation before an inquisitor, or the vicar of the Holy Office, or where these are not present, before a bishop. The crime, whatever it may be, not only attaches to the principal and the accomplice, but also to every one who knows of it and does not reveal it; so that if any of you, for example, dear reader, should unfortunately belong to the church of the Inquisition you would be obliged to accuse, not only myself, but all those together who with yourself listen to me; and whoever knows that you have listened to my discourses, although he himself may never have seen me, is under obligation to denounce me to the Inquisition.' Says the Doctor still farther as an illustration of the hidden workings of that abominable power: "I will here relate a fact which always pains me to recall to mind, and which, until the present occasion, I have never before spoken about.

"During my residence at Viterbo, my native town, where I was public professor and teacher in the school di Gradi, I was one day applied to by a lady of prepossessing appearance, to see me in the sacristry. And as I entered the apartment where she was waiting for me, she begged the sacristan to leave us alone, and suddenly closing the door, presented a moving spectacle to my eyes. Throwing off her bonnet, and letting loose in a moment her long and beautiful tresses, the lady fell upon her knees before me, and gave vent to her grief in abundance of sighs and tears. On my endeavoring to encourage her, and to persuade her to rise and to unfold her mind to me, she at length, in a voice broken by sobs, thus addressed me:—

"No, father I will never rise from this position unless you promise to pardon my heavy transgression.

'Although not much younger than myself, she addressed me as Father.

"'Signora,' replied I, 'it belongs to God to pardon our transgressions. If you have in any way injured me, so far I can forgive; but I confess I have no cause of complaint against you, with whom indeed I have not the pleasure of being acquainted.'

"'I have been guilty of great sin, for which no absolution unless you beforehand will remit it to me.'

"'You must explain yourself more fully; as yet I have no idea of what you allude to.'

"'It is about a year since I obtained absolution from my confessor, and in the last few days he has entirely forbid me his presence, telling I am damned. I have tried others, and all tell me the same thing. One however, has lately informed me that if I wish to be saved and pardoned, I must apply to you, who, after the pope, is the only one who can grant me absolution.'

"'Signora, there must be some mistake here; explain yourself; of what description is your sin?'

"'It is against the Holy Office.'

"'How can I help you?'

"'How? are not you Father Achilli, the vicar of the Holy Office?'

"'You have been misinformed, Signora. I am Achilli, the deputy master of the Holy Palace, not Office. You may see my name with this title prefixed, to all works that are printed here, in lieu of the master himself. I assure you that neither my principal nor myself have any authority in cases which regard the Inquisition.'

"The good lady hereupon rose from her knees, arranged her hair, wiped the tears from her eyes, and asked permission to relate her case to me, and having sat down began as follows:

"'Not long since, as I was going about the time of Easter, according to my usual custom to confess my sins to my parish priest. He being well acquainted with me and my family, began to interrogate me respecting my son, the only one I have, a young man twenty-four years of age, full of patriotic ardor, but with little respect for the priests. It happened that I observed to the curate that notwithstanding my remonstrances, my son was in the habit of saying that the business of the priests was a complete deception, and that the head of all the imposters was the pope himself. Would I had never told him! The curate would hear no further. "It is your duty," said he, "to denounce your son to the Inquisition." Imagine what I felt at this intimation. To be the accuser of my own son! "Such is the case," said he, "there is no help for it. I cannot absolve you, neither can any one else until the thing is done."'"

In carrying out the principles of the Inquisite, as elucidated in the foregoing narrative, can we conceive of a more striking fulfillment of the prophecy—"Many shall be offended and shall hate one another, and shall betray one another." A father and a mother to reveal the thoughts of their own children, so trustingly confided to them; a revelation that may lead to their death. Well did the prophet of Nazareth say eighteen hundred years ago, as he stood and looked on the coming future, "parents shall betray their children to death, and children shall rise up and cause their parents to be put to death; and the time draweth nigh."

From the time of Pope Inocence III. and the establishment of the Inquisition, this work of darkness and cruelty has been going on.

"And many false prophets shall atise, and shall deceive many." (v. 11.) These things are peculiar to the time of the end. A false prophet is one who augurs falsely or incorrectly for the future. One who cries peace, when God has not spoken peace, and flatters the multitude with the promise of earthly good, when desolation is about to grasp the enemies of the Lord within its withering arms. Such were the false prophets of old, who misguided the Jewish nation. And such are the false teachers (prophets) of our own time. They are to be found in church and state; in the sanctuary and in the legislative assembly; in the midst of the flaming signals God has hung out in the heavens above, and while the thrones of earthly potentates are reeling, and republics are being dismembered, and the statesman flatters the multitude with the hope of national agrandisement unparalleled in history, and opportunities for the acquirement of individual wealth such as were never known before. And the professed ministers of Christ, in the room of heralding abroad in thunder tones the coming of the Lord to judge the world in righteousness; to break the nations with a rod of iron and dash them to pieces as a potter's vessel, are also echoing the cry of peace and safety, saying, "The vision that he seeth is for many days, and he prophesieth of the times afar off."

By such agencies, Christ said, many would be deceived. And the present generation is witnessing in a most marked manner its fulfillment. The personal advent of our Lord to the earth again a second time, is the great burden of prophecy, both in the old and new dispensations. And all who have the testimony of Jesus (which is the spirit of prophecy) will share this burden, while the nominal church and world led on by a body of teachers, religious and political, dreaming of worldly aggrandisement, and dead to the final issue, are being decreased.

"And because iniquity shall abound the love of many shall wax cold." (v. 12.) How strikingly is this fulfilled at the present time. Turn our eyes which way we will, the apostasy of the heart of the church is evident.

It is the time-serving, pleasure-seeking age.

For iniquity to abound, is for wickedness to go unrestrained, like the breaking loose of the pent up fires of a volcano, or the removal of the embankment of a vast reservoir; the water gushes with an irresistible power, inundating everything around, bearing upon its bosom the spoils of its wreck. So iniquity, loosed from its moorings goes unrestrained, licensed and tolerated in civil and religious associates; conformity to Christian principle is slackened in the church, defiance to law and order in the State, is getting to be as common as it was in Sodom of old.

The natural result is, the love of many waxes cold. Probably the aggregate number of professed Christians never amounted to what it does now at any one time in the past. But does the piety of the church compare well with the past? I think not.

Says H. Bonar, in the Quarterly Journal of Prophecy (January, 1850):

"The religion of the day is an easy-minded religion, without conflict or wrestling, without self-denial and sacrifice; a religion which knows nothing of the pangs of the new birth as its commencement, and nothing of the desperate struggle with the devil day by day, making us long for resurrection deliverance—for the binding of the adversary and for the Lord's arrival. It is a second rate religion; a religion in which there is no largeness, grandeur, no potency, no noble-mindedness, no devotion, no self-devotedness, no all constraining love. It is a hollow religion with a fine exterior, but an aching heart; a heart unsatisfied; a soul not at rest; a conscience not at peace with God; a religion masked it may be, by activity and excitement, but betraying all the while the consciousness of a wound hidden within, and hence unable to animate to lofty doings.

"It is a feeble religion, lacking the sinews and bones of hardier times; very different from the indomitable, much enduring, storm-braving religion, not merely for the apostolic days, but even to the reformation.

'It is an uncertain religion; that is to say, it is not rooted in certainty; it is not the outflowing of a soul assured of pardon and rejoicing in the fillial relationship between itself and God. Hence there is no liberty of service, for the question of personal acceptance is still an unsettled thing. There is a working for pardon. Hence all is bondage, heaviness, irksomeness. There is a speaking for God, but it is with a faltering tongue; there is a laboring for God, but it is with fettered hands. There is a moving in the way of his commandments, but it is with a heavy drag upon our limbs Hence the inefficient, uninfluential character of our religion. It does not tell on others, for it has not fully told upon ourselves. It falls short of its mark, for the arm which drew the blow is paralyzed."

Is not the above, and much more that might be said of this generation, true? Yet how cheering the promise. "He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." (v. 13.) Blessed assurance this to the scattered flock, who are so fearful of stumbling and denying the word of God. Though few in number they are the chosen of the Lord Almighty. They shall be saved. This is the Lord's firm decree.

"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come." (v. 14.) This gospel of the kingdom is to be a sign and witness to all nations that the end of the age is near.

In giving an exposition of this verse a number of questions may be asked and a number of points considered:

1. What is the gospel of the kingdom?

2. What is "all the world," referred to?

3. Has it been preached in all the world for a witness?

1. Dr. Clarke says the word gospel is of Saxon origin, and signifies good message. Uangelion is its corresponding term in Greek, which signifies good news; and thus some give it this rendering: "This good news of the kingdom shall first be preached," etc. With the above criticism, the gospel of the kingdom can mean nothing short of a proclamation of the near approach of the kingdom, based upon the signs of the times as its evidences. There can be nothing plainer than this: that the kingdom of God is a future dispensation, and that the "setting" of it is to be preceeded by signs; and that when these signs are developed, the near approach of the kingdom is to be heralded to the world.

There was something similar to this exhibited at the first advent of Christ. John came from the wilderness preaching the gospel of the kingdom, saying, "Repent for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Christ the Redeemer, came in immediate succession, saying, "The time is fulfilled," and "the kingdom of heaven is at hand; repent ye therefore and believe the gospel." Next he choose the twelve, and seventy, and and sent them into every place whither he himself would come, saying, "Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel until the Son of man be come," telling them lastly that there were some standing there who should not taste death till they saw the kingdom of God. Now all this movement was confined to the Jewish nation, and they being a typical people, the promise that the kingdom should appear to them was fulfilled by the manifestatio of the kingdom to them in its minia-

ROMANS 8: 23.

Waiting amid the shadows
For the blushing of the dawn,
Waiting amid the darkness
For the sunlight of the morn;
Waiting because th' appointed age
Has not told out its years—
Waiting because a groaning earth
Has wept not all its tears.

Toil worn and very weary—
For the waiting time is long—
Leaning upon the promise
For the Promiser is strong.
Waiting because some straying sheep
Are on the mountains still,
They must be sought, and found, and saved,
It is the Father's will.

Chilled by an [illegible] wind
The lamp [illegible] burns low,
Waiting [illegible]

Rest.

"Thou hast made us for thyself and the heart never resteth till it findeth rest in thee. —Augustine.

Made for thyself, O God!
Made for thy love, thy service, thy delight;
Made to show forth thy wisdom, grace, and might;
Made for thy praise, whom veiled archangels laud;
Oh, strange and glorious thought, that we may be A joy to thee!

Yet the heart turns away
From this grand destiny of bliss, and deems
'Twas made for its poor self, for passing dreams,
Chasing illusions melting day by day,
Till for ourselves we read on this world's best,
"This is not rest!"

Nor can the vain toil cease,
Till in the shadowy maze of life we meet
One who can guide our aching, wayward feet
To find himself, our Way, our Life, our Peace.
In him the long unrest is soothed and stilled;
Our hearts are filled.

O rest, so true, so sweet!
(Would it were shared by all the weary world!)
'Neath shadowing banner of his love unfurled,
We bend to kiss the Master's pierced feet;
Then lean our love upon his loving breast,
And know God's rest.

What is Sanctification?

From various articles in late numbers of THE TIMES, I discover that there is quite a diversity of opinions existing in our ranks at the present time, relative to the doctrine of sanctification. While reading the articles on the subject, I have been forced to the conclusion that the writers have not sufficiently explained their premises, to make their arguments tangible to the common people who in reality compose the great body of the church, for whose edification and growth in Bible truth, we should invariably speak and write. But understand, brethren, that I do not mean to cast any reflections or insinuations upon the Christian character of my brethren. I would sooner put my hand into his drawer and steal the hard earnings of his life, than attempt to detract from his Christian character one of its least elements. Therefore I do not take up my pen to discuss either the sufficiency or insufficiency of my brethren, but to strike, together with them, in the spirit of love and Christian meekness, for a development of truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

Solomon tells us that "Where no counsel is, the people fall, but in the multitude of counselors there is safety." (Prov. 11: 14.) Then let us counsel together upon this doctrine of sanctification, though not "darkening counsel by words without wisdom." With prayerful hearts let us inquire at the fountain of knowledge, the treasury of truth, and learn what the Bible teaches for sanctification, and in what respect we become the subjects of that grace.

Sanctification as a Bible-taught doctrine, and, indeed, as one of the greatest elements of our Christian life, claims a most candid and prayerful investigation. I will now notice the word as it occurs in Bible phraseology, and endeavor to interpret it in a Bible sense. But before this, let us agree in what a Bible sense consists; for our work will be in vain if you work by one rule and I by another.

I will now propose a rule to work by, to which I feel assured you will agree, as it is an infallible rule, not only for the special work upon the question now before us, but for the interpretation of every Bible phrase. It is this: Let us interpret the Scriptures in every instance in harmony with the great fact that Christ is our "ALL in ALL," in human redemption.

This is the key stone of the gospel bridge, upon which the whole structure is suspended. It is the central sun of personal Christianity, and shines with steady light upon every page of the revealed word, "to give light to those who sit in darkness," and to make the way-worn pilgrim glad. Let us then reject every construction or interpretation of Bible phraseology that does not comport with this great fact, and regard it as the teachings of men, and not of God.

Let us now examine the subject under the following divisions, to wit. (1) define the term. (2) Who are the subjects of sanctification, and how do they become so. (3) What are the manifestations or effects wrought by it, upon those under its influence.

We will examine a few passages of Scripture in which the term occurs. In Gen. 2: 3, we read that "God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it." Now what can be the meaning of the term as used here. Most assuredly it cannot mean to make holy in the sense of righteousness; neither to pardon or cleanse, in any sense: but simply to consecrate or set apart for a special purpose. But to be sure we are correct, let us try these renderings of the term by reading them in the text, in room of the word sanctified. "God blessed the seventh day, and made it righteous!" or, he "blessed the seventh day and pardoned it!" or, he "blessed the seventh day and cleansed it!" Neither of these renderings read reasonably, hence they cannot be the meaning of the word used here. But let us read it thus: "God blessed the seventh day, and set it apart for a special purpose," and we have the idea complete which the passage is intended to convey.

In Ex. 13: 2 we read, "Sanctify unto me all the first born, whatsoever openeth the womb among the children of Israel, both of man and of beast, it is mine." What! were the children of Israel commanded to sanctify a beast, either in the sense of making it righteous, or pardoning, or cleansing it in any sense of justification whatever? We answer with emphasis, no! but in the sense of setting it apart for a special purpose, which purpose was as "a token" or memorial of the miraculous deliverance of Israel from Egyptian bondage, as may be seen by reading the chapter.

Again (Ex. 19: 10) we read: "And the Lord said unto Moses, go unto the people and sanctify them to-day and to-morrow, and let them wash their clothes," Here again we only have the idea of sanctification or a setting apart of the people for that special occasion. But we find that they made and worshiped a golden calf, in the very presence of God, after two days of "sanctification:" hence they were not made sinless, or perfect by sanctification at that time.

As we have now seen that man and beast can be sanctified unto God, I will proceed to show that inanimate things can also be sanctified, as indeed I have already given an instance in Gen. 2: 3, to which I will add but one or two other quotations. In Joel 1: 14 the priests are commanded to "sanctify a feast." See also Rom. 15: 16.

We will now take another view of the Bible use of the term; for it teaches that God, even "God that is holy" can be sanctified, and that, too, by men, sinful and corrupt as they are, as the following citations show: Num. 20: 12; Lev. 10: 3; Deut. 32: 31; Is. 5: 16, 8: 13; Ezk. 28: 25, 20: 41.

We are also taught that God the Father hath sanctified Christ: "Say ye of him whom the father hath sanctified and sent into this world, Thou blasphemest; because I said I am the Son of God?" (John 10: 36.) Did our blessed Savior mean to say that the Father had made holy, or cleansed, or pardoned him in any sense whatever? Certainly not. But he undoubtedly meant that the Father had consecrated or set him apart for the special work of human redemption, which setting apart is also meant when he says, "for their sakes [the apostles] I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth." (Jno. 17; 19.)

Now in no instance where the term occurs in any of the above quotations, does it signify a sense of pardon or justification, but simply, dedication to some special purpose. But since most of the citations given are from the Old Testament, we will give it a further examination from the New Testament, as some may think that it signified more there than in the Old.

In Mat. 23: 17 we read: "Ye fools and blind, for whether is greater, the gold, or the temple that sanctifieth the gold." Again in 1 Tim. 4: 45 we read: "For every creature of God is good and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving; for it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer." In these passages, it is plain the term can have no other meaning, than that of consecration or setting apart; and that it is used too, of inanimate objects.

In Eph. 5: 26 we find it applied to the church. "Christ so loved the church that he gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word." Here the word cleanse covers the whole idea of pardon or justification. Hence sanctify must here also have the meaning we claim for it. But if this rendering in the above passage is not satisfactory, we will now give a quotation in which the term can have no ambiguous meaning. "For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife; and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband, else were your children unclean; but now are they holy." Now what is the sense of this passage? Does it teach that the unbelieving party is saved, justified by the believing party? And does it teach, further, that their children, by the same sanctification are made partakers of the gospel covenant, and should be received into the fellowship of the church? It undoubtedly teaches all this, if sanctify means to pardon, or confer a personal spiritual blessing. But this doctrine is not compatible with our rule. It does not make Christ our "ALL in ALL,"—in "wisdom, and righteousness and sanctification." What then does it teach? you ask. It simply teaches that the parties referred to, may by their own consent, be set apart in matrimony, without danger of fornication, which as a matter of course, makes their offspring clean, or legitimate under the matrimonial law.

We think that it is now made plain that to sanctify in a Bible sense only signifies to set apart to a special purpose, and may be applied either to God, persons or things. With this idea before us, let us now examine some of the passages that are commonly cited to prove sanctification a second spiritual blessing, a sort of gospel Gibraltar, whose walls it is impossible for the enemy to scale or pierce; and, it is further argued, that believers in common do not enjoy its protection, but its blessings are confined to comparatively few, who, it seems, are fighting in advance of the general army.

Now if this idea of sanctification is compatible with our rule, we will say, amen and amen! But if it is not, we will take the privilege of rejecting it as anti-gospel, and opposed to the welfare of the church, and the spread of truth. But let us give it an impartial examination, which brings us to a second division of our subject, to wit: Who are the subjects of sanctification, and how do they become so?

We will begin with 1 Thes. 5: 23: "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly: and I pray God your spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." In this text the apostle evidently expresses a desire for two distinct things in behalf of the Thessalonian brethren, or else he is guilty of a very awkward redundancy of words in the same breath. Let us see. In the first place, he desires their entire sanctification, and in the second place, he prays God that their spirit, soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of the Savior. Now it appears clear to us that sanctification spoken of here is one thing, and preservation another; and we all understand that to be preserved blameless is just equivalent to being acquitted or justified when Jesus comes. Then sanctification in this place cannot have the sense of holiness, if the apostle desired two distinct things. But sanctify must have the same meaning here that it has in Eph. 5: 26—where it said that "Christ so loved the church that he gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it," which shows that sanctifying and cleansing are two distinct things, although they are both applied to the same subject; sanctification representing the consecration of the entire creature and all he has to God, as an offering, not indeed to make reconciliation to God for his sins, but because it is a reasonable service.

"I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice.... which is your reasonable service." Cleansing, pardoning, making blameless, then signifying both God's acceptance of the creatures offering, through Christ, and the application of "his precious blood," which "cleanseth us from all sin," giving us a union with our divine Redeemer, in one common brotherhood, and "an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away."

Who then are sanctified? We answer, all that are in Christ Jesus, "who of God IS MADE unto us wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption." But after all this does the creature become sinless, while in mortality? Let us hear the great apostle again. He says: "For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing; for to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good, I find not, for the good that I would, I do not, but the evil which I would not, that I do. Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. I find then a law that when I would do good evil is present with me. For I delight in the law of God after the inward man; but I see another law in my members warring against the law of my mind and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin, which is in my members. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind, I myself, serve the law of God, but with the flesh the law of sin." (Rom. 6: 18–25.) The same apostle says again in Gal. 8: 17—"For the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary, the one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would." Are not these plain statements? How can they be misunderstood? How plainly they teach the necessity of the Intercessor, so that if any man sin, he have an advocate with the Father, even Jesus Christ the righteous. Christ then is our life. The elements are all in him, not in us; and it is only by imputation that we receive them now. But there is a glorious time coming when we will receive them literally in our own persons, when "these vile bodies shall be fashioned like unto his glorious body."

Then say you, "Shall we sin that grace may abound?" Does it make no difference as to personal holiness, if we only have the sanctification of Christ imputed unto us? The question may be clearly answered in few words. Our own sanctification or consecration brings us to Christ, not in any sense of justification or pardon, but as repenting rebels pleading for pardon. Christ then, as our intercessor, presents us to the Father imputing his sanctification, and his righteousness unto us, in which condition only God can receive us as justified. Now, as a matter of course, if we have in reality sanctified all we are and have, unto God, the love of sin is destroyed. So then if we love the Lord Jesus Christ with all our strength, we hate sin to the same extent, and will not make provisions for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof. The effects then of sanctification are an upright walk and a godly conversation, and a patient waiting for the promises of God. Oh! let us then all strive to have an inheritance with all them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, with them who have washed their robes and made them white, not in works, but in the blood of the Lamb. Then, when these changing years shall have passed away, with all the scenes of sorrow and of death, and Jesus comes in his glory, we will stand with that blessed company on Zion's hill, and with golden harps tuned in heavenly harmony, we will unite with the sanctified of every nation kindred, tongue and people, to "sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty. Just and true are thy ways thou King of saints."

When do we Become like Christ?

This is an important inquiry, and should be answered according to the Word of God. While men are in sin, and natural in their dispositions they are not like Christ. It therefore follows that they must become like Christ if they ever are like him. Whether this work is a progressive one, and obtained by degrees, or whether it is simple and absolute and an immediate result, issuing from compliance with certain well-defined and well-regulated conditions is the real inquiry. And unless the Scriptures give us some clue to the answer, it will be in vain to attempt the solution. Praise the Lord, the Scriptures are not silent on this point. Let us develop a few facts:

OUR RECONCILIATION.

For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son; much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life. (Rom. 5: 10.)

And you, that were sometime alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled. In the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy and unblamable and unreprovable in his sight. If ye continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven; whereof I Paul am made a minister; who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church: whereof I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fulfill the word of God; even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but is now made manifest to his saints: to whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory; whom we preach warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus: whereunto I also labor, striving according to his working, which worketh in me mightily. (Col. 1: 21–29.)

In these passages and their connections we find beautifully delineated the subject of the sinner's reconciliation by the interposition and substitution of Jesus Christ.

This grand enterprise, so far as it relates to Christ, has long been completed; but as it relates to the sinner, in the individual phase of the work, is only accomplished when the sinner accepts of Jesus as his sure refuge, and believes in him to the salvation of his soul. Jesus has worked out the reconciliation for the sinner, but unless the sinner accepts of it, he will not be benefited by it' but will remain an enemy of God and an alien from Israel. This is so plain that all can see it.

God is offended; man is the offender; Jesus has come to effect a reconciliation between these parties. In other words, Jesus is our reconciliation. To be reconciled to God is to become like Christ. God cannot look upon sin with allowance. A sinner, from the very nature of the case, if from no other reason, is in an unreconciled condition. It will not help the case to get rid of a part of the sins. Neither will it do to get rid of the sins and cling to the wicked disposition to sin. Such a one would not be a fit subject for the favor and blessing of God. In view of these facts we find no difficulty in knowing when we become like Christ. It is at conversion. Or when we cease "being enemies by wicked works and become reconciled." The results that follow this reconciliation or being like Christ, are glorious—holiness, unblamableness, unreprovableness in the sight of God, "if ye continue in the faith," etc. It will be noticed that this continuing in the faith is the condition upon which the full enjoyment of the fruits of reconciliation is predicated; also that this continuing is from the reconciliation. By reading the verses that follow in the above passage it will be seen that this person thus reconciled and thus continuing, is in possession of the "hope of glory," which is "Christ formed within."

In all this there is no intimation of a second work. There is nothing said about a partial reconciliation at conversion and a full reconciliation at some after period in our Christian experience. And I aver that such a theory is not taught in any part of God's Word. All talk therefore about a higher life in the sense of a second life in Christianity is simply contrary to the Word of the Lord.

SINS PARDONED.

Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile. (Ps. 32:1, 2.) This shows the condition of the one whose sins are pardoned, which is a very desirable one. "Blessed is he." It would be useless for God to pardon our past sins unless he, by that act, affects in some way our disposition to sin. For to take a man's sins away from him, and still leave him in possession of a "wicked heart," is to leave him in as bad condition as ever he was. It is therefore said, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." This cleansing process is performed for the sinner when he complies with the conditions of salvation. This point is beautifully set forth by Paul in Rom. 5: 1: "Therefore being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." "Peace with God." which is another way of speaking of the sinner's reconciliation to God, follows justification, or sins pardoned. This is the blessed condition into which by the pardon of sins we are introduced. What more can we ask; what more are we capable of? Peace with God! Let us be contented with what the Lord has been pleased to do for us and not, becoming restive, seek at his hands what he has never promised to give.

Our sins are pardoned, or we are justified in the sight of God, as the result of our complying with certain conditions by which we become like Christ or accept of Christ as our reconciliation. Our sins are pardoned at conversion; we therefore become like Christ when we get into Christ, or when we are converted from satan to Christ.

Christian reader, let us be sure we have accepted of Christ in all his fullness, and then let it be our constant aim to "continue in the faith."

In another article I will notice What it is to be like Christ.

A Frank Acknowledgment.

I find the following significant statement in the editorial items in a late number of the Central Baptist, a leading Baptist paper, published at St. Louis:

> The soul sleeping doctrine, one of the most fearful and insidious of ancient heresies, exists to a greater or less extent in religious circles. Of late years it has made considerable progress in some sects.

Let us briefly analyze this statement. As to the progress of "the soul-sleeping doctrine," nothing need be said. Let the thousands who "of late years" have learned to love and cherish the Bible idea of the unit nature of man and the gospel hope of the resurrection of the dead, decide this point! But the editor says it is an "ancient heresy!" Thanks for the admission. I consider this a frank acknowledgment, and will here present some testimony from an ancient book, showing still further that it is an ancient heresy—if indeed a heresy it be!

> And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this he fell asleep. (Acts 7: 60.) And the graves were opened, and many of the bodies of the saints which slept arose. (Mat. 27: 52.) But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. (1 Thes. 4: 13–15.)

The last passage quoted proves not only that the dead sleep, but that the souls of the dead sleep in heaven—providing its common interpretation be correct. Our friends of the immortal soul school claim that Jesus will bring the souls of the righteous with him when he comes the "second time." And this text is referred to as authority. But the text affirms that the persons coming with Jesus are sleepers. "Men that sleep," etc. Who is the soul-sleeper according to this?

But a further statement is that the heresy is "insidious" and "fearful," and that, too, in a superlative sense—"most." Now, if the editor means that it is "fearful" and "insidious," in that it is certain death to modern theology, and destroys effectually at one fell stroke all the vagaries and unfounded visions of Platonic philosophy, I say, Well said! and I endorse the statement most heartily. For certain it is that the Bible doctrine of the sleep of the dead and consequently their literal resurrection is death and destruction to the intangible mystifications of modern spiritism and orthodox immaterialism.

Thankful for past favors, I should be very glad if the much respected editor of the Central Baptist would continue his examination of this "ancient doctrine," and, in the meantime, keep his readers posted as to the result.

Light.

SCRIPTURE QUOTATIONS.

"God said Let there be light, and there was light; for God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth: but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto our path; for the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more until the perfect day. Ye are the light of the world; a city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. Let your light so shine before men that others may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven. The light of the body is the eye; if therefore thine eye be single thy whole body shall be full of light, but if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness! In Christ was life, and the life was the light of men. That was the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness but shall have the light of life. Walk while ye have light lest darkness come upon ye, for he that walketh in darkness, knoweth not whither he goeth. I came a light into the world, that whosoever believeth in me should not abide in darkness. While ye have light believe in the light yet ye may be the children of light. The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light. Therefore judge nothing before the time until the Lord come; who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the heart, and then shall every man have praise of God. But if our gospel be hid it is hid to them that are lost, in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them; for God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined into our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. For ye were sometime darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord; walk as children of light; and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. But all things that are reproved are made manifest by the light; for whatsoever doth make manifest is light, wherefore he saith, awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. Ye are all children of the light, and the children of the day; we are not of the night nor of darkness. Therefore let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober. But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should show forth the praise of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light.

Shall All Likewise Perish.

There are some good points in the following article from a Universalist source, which will be appreciated by our readers. It seems that some one sent the Gospel Banner, a tract written by one John Angell, commencing as follows:

> "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish!" Such was the awful and tremendous denunciation of our Lord, to those Jews who, were at that time listening to his discourse. And except you repent, my reader, you will perish; perish body and soul in the bottomless pit, and perish everlastingly. There is a world of misery in that word perish, it is deep as hell, broad as infinity, and long as eternity."

To this nonsense, all the more despicable because of its pretended foundation in Scripture, the Banner responds:

"And that is all which this man Angell knows of the meaning of language, or of the subject about which he writes. The word 'perish' in no instance in the Bible, or in its primitive and proper sense, ever means to suffer endlessly in the bottomless pit—or to 'perish everlastingly,' or to suffer at all in the future existence.

"'Perish,' says Webster, 'is from the Latin peric—to go or run through—to come to nothing; from the prefix per through, and ire to go.' Hence the primitive meaning of the word, he says, is 'to be destroyed,' 'to pass away,' 'to come to nothing.' And yet this ignoramus whom the orthodox church has employed to write its tracts to frighten sinners into its 'fold' lest if they remain out they will be damned, tells us there is a world of misery in that word 'perish;' that its misery 'is as deep as hell, broad as infinity, and LONG AS ETERNITY.' Instead of this, it has no such meaning, but signifies to pass away' and 'come to nothing.' If one 'comes to nothing,' how can he suffer in hell to all eternity?

"The word is applied in the Scriptures to natural death. 'Behold we die, we perish;' 'The blessing of him that was ready to perish come upon you;' 'Give strong drink to him that is ready to perish.' These are all Scriptural expressions, signifying to die. When the disciples were in a boat with Christ and there came on a great tempest and the Master was asleep, they awoke him, exclaiming, 'Lord save us; we perish;' they could not have meant by this 'Lord save us from misery which is endless,' for they were exposed to no such calamity, and dreamed of nothing of the kind; but they were fearful of being swallowed up by the angry waves, and desired Christ to exert his heaven-derived power to rescue them from such a fate.

"Can a horse, an ox, or any dumb brute be in danger of 'perishing everlastingly?' No one believes this, and yet in numerous instances the Scriptures declare that they perished.

"The first instance in all the Bible where the word 'perish' is used, is Gen. 41: 36, where God instructed Pharaoh to lay up corn 'that the land perish not through famine.' Any one can see that the idea conveyed by this word as here used, is in perfect harmony with the definition given by Webster—viz., 'to be destroyed,' 'to pass away,' to 'come to nothing.'"

"And this is its signification as employed by our Savior in the language quoted by this orthodox divine at the beginning of his tract for the conversion of sinners: 'Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.'

"'Except YE repent.' Who were these men, whom Christ called upon to repent, and whom he declared if they did not repent they should perish? The context informs us (Lk. 13: 1–3) that they were Jews who 'had told Christ of some Galileans' who had opposed the Roman government, for which opposition, Pilate, the Roman governor, had slain them while they were offering sacrifices at the altar so that their blood was mingled with the blood of the animals slain in sacrifice. In this way these men 'perished.' When they told Christ of this circumstance, he answered and said unto them (v. 2) 'suppose ye that these Galileans were sinners above all the Galileans, because they suffered such things? I tell you, nay; but except YE repent, ye shall all likewise perish.' By which he meant—not that they should suffer misery 'deep as hell, broad as infinity and long as eternity,' as this 'Angell' asserts—but that they should perish in some similar way; as this is the meaning of the original word translated 'likewise.' It is not used in the sense of also, but in the sense of like manner, and means that they should be destroyed in some way similar to that in which these Galileans 'perished.'

"Christ then instantly referred to another calamity which had probably recently transpired in a portion of the city called Siloam where a tower had fallen and suddenly killed several persons, and said: 'Of those eighteen upon whom the tower of Siloam fell, and slew them, think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem? I tell you, nay; but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.' Meaning by this just what he did in the other instance; that they should suddenly be destroyed by some such calamity. Christ had just warned the Jews repeatedly of the terrible disaster that was soon to come upon them and their city in consequence of their great wickedness, unless they repented and united themselves with his followers. A brief time only remained to them. But they heeded it not; and the consequence was that a destruction so disastrous came upon them and their nation, through the power of the Roman army sent to destroy them, that twenty centuries have been insufficient for their recovery. It was to some calamity of this nature that Christ referred when he said 'ye shall all likewise perish,' and not to their suffering in hell 'long as eternity.' Surely if our Lord had designed to convey such an idea he would have said so in direct and positive terms and not have used the word 'perish,' which meant simply to die or to come to naught.

"The author of this tract would do well to study what the learned of his own and other orthodox churches have said relative to the meaning of this passage. Some half dozen of the most eminent of them construe it as above.

UNCLE Smart Washington, an old negro at Hilton Head, who had laid up with great economy out of his small earnings enough to buy some boards and lumber, and then had gradually built himself a house, came home one evening and found it burnt to the ground. They had saved nothing, for he had taken into his home a poor old paralytic negro woman who belonged to nobody, and it took so much time to get her out of the house that every thing in it had to be left. So the old man looked at the ashes of his house, which was more to him than Buckingham Palace is to Queen Victoria (for if that was burnt she could go to Windsor, but Uncle Smart had no other place to go to), he looked at the ashes and said, in bad grammar, but in a heavenly spirit, "If it be him will, it ought to be my pleasure, and shall be."

IT is advertised in Boston that Rev. This is quite equal to, and on a par with, the report of one of the papers when Mr. Everett was a Unitarian minister in Boston, and he offered prayer on a public occasion. The paper said it was "the most eloquent prayer ever delivered to a Boston audience."

Advent Christian Times.

CHICAGO, TUESDAY, December 17, 1872.

A New York paper says:

The religious services on Thanksgiving day were not very generally observed in New York, and the attendance in the churches was lamentably thin. A few of the pulpit celebrities discoursed to full houses, but, in other instances, even a union of congregations made a sad showing of people. If the day has any significance, why is it not more generally kept in its religious appointments?

Has the passage concerning a people with 'a form' but without 'the power of godliness' an application here?

As the year 1871 drew into its closing days it was pronounced by general consent to have been 'The Black Year!' Better things were desired for the then new, now old and dying year. But the result has been disappointing. The Boston Globe truly says: 'The year eighteen hundred and seventy-two, now within four weeks of its close, will be memorable in history as a year of disaster and death. It is especially within its latter half that an unparalleled number of heart-rending disasters appalled mankind.' Will the coming year have a brighter history? Prophecy and past experience combines to assure us that there will be no permanent change for the better.

'Go and see the visions of St. John.' So said a flaming poster we observed in an Indiana city. It was a text for us: we wished we could preach from it to the careless inhabitants of the place. They no doubt turned out freely to see the tableaux of the Apocalypse in panoramic painting upon canvass. But how few of them ever earned, or cared to earn, the blessing—'Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things that are written therein.' There is yet a little time, and we say to all—'Go and see the visions of St. John.' 'There is a blessing in it.'

WE recently remarked that Mr. Muller's extraordinary success does not prove that every orphan asylum should be supported in accordance with his system, or that every Christian should have the same proportion of faith he seems to possess. This appears to be his own view. In a recent interview Dr. Cuyler mentioned to him that some persons had tried to imitate his experiment of getting funds for benevolent objects by prayer, and had failed. Mr. Muller replied that they failed 'because not called to that work.' The 'gift of faith' is something different from the saving, heart felt belief which unites us to Christ. All had it not in the apostles' days; nor do all possess it now. Let us rejoice whenever it is exhibited and demonstrated.

MARK TRAFTON once wrote a tract on baptism. Among other things he said:

> Immersion endangers life; it is not only dangerous, but, in the case of females, grossly immodest. No lady of sensibility and refinement can go into the water....without finding her modesty shocked almost beyond endurance....Why do Baptists, appealing to the practice of antiquity for immersion, refuse at the same time to follow that custom by baptizing their candidates naked!

Since publishing the above Mr. Trafton has had some converts under his preaching who insisted upon immersion, and rather than lose them to some other church, in spite of the fact that immersion is 'dangerous' and 'immodest,' and can only be consistently administered to 'naked' candidates, he immersed them in the ordinary fashion, and Trinity Methodist Church, Charlestown, Mass., saved two members.

THE advocates of Napoleonistic views of prophecy have a fine opportunity now to test their principles of interpretation. They had no difficulty before Sedan in filling out the sketches of prophecy with Napoleonic lineaments. Why not now show us where the thrilling events and magnificent blunders of the Franco-Prussian war were foretold, where 'the man of destiny,' with talent to rule a world, is at the same time presented to us a deceived, blundering imbecile; tell us where the retreat to Chiselhurst is related; and, instead of leaving us with significant hints that Chiselhurst may yet be exchanged for a throne, show us from the Scriptures of truth the predictions that fit the events.

A journal which yesterday assured us that Napoleon was as good as reinthroned, to day, (as we write,) exalts Thiers' statesmanship, which, by a 'brilliant stroke,' has given new security to the republic.

CHRISTIANITY AND OPIUM.

The Opium trade is admitted by all who are acquainted with the facts to be the curse of China, the great hindrance to missionary effort in that country. As Christian nations have sent rum and missionaries to Africa, so England is sending opium and religion to China. There is however this difference in her trade in these two commodities: China may do as she pleases about the religion, but the opium market must not be closed. The Chinese government is compelled by the power of the bayonet, and such arguments as the cannon of a powerful navy can yield, to allow the importation of the drug which is an unmitigated curse to its citizens, and is rapidly and perceptibly debasing the entire people.

An English missionary says: "The Chinese people cannot see how the same people can dispense to them a destructive poison with one hand, and a saving religion with the other." There is nothing very surprising in this. While the fact remains that Christian England forces the opium of India upon China for the sake of the thirty-six millions of revenue clear of all expenses which is thus secured to her Indian Treasury. It is the price of blood; the purchase of the mental, moral, and physical ruin of millions of souls: the heaping of money for a poison that is consuming the very vitals of a vast nation.

Hitherto all protest has been in vain. The Evangelical Alliance is urged to bring what it has of power to bear upon the English government to cause it to sacrifice its opium revenue for the sake of humanity and Christianity.

Meanwhile every Christian should raise his voice in denunciation of so foul a national crime. And the boasting nineteenth century may well cease vaunting itself of its progress in good until this vile stain upon its honor is removed. For the present the god of this world—Mammon, whom men cannot serve and at the same time serve the true God—rules the hour.

MY JOURNAL.

SABBATH, Dec. 1. Winter is upon us, with a snow storm sweeping over the prairie. We worshiped at our family altar to-day, at the Park. It is good to trust in God, and "abide under the shadow of the Almighty."

MONDAY, Dec. 2. My mind was turned to-day to the interesting period of Roman history connected with the conversion of the Roman empire, when Michael and his angels fought, and the dragon and his angels fought and prevailed not; neither was there any more place found for them in heaven. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent called the devil and satan which deceiveth the whole world." (Rev. 12: 7–9.)

This prophecy has reference to the Roman empire in its pagan form, in conflict with Christ and his apostles; and in this conflict paganism fell, and Christianity triumphed. This was one of the grandest events of history.

Christianity triumphed through the power of miracles and prophecy. The history of the miracles of Christ and his apostles, with the fulfillment of prophecy, established the divinity of Christ and his religion.

The spirit of the disciples of Christ, in the forgiveness of enemies, and the love of mankind, as well as their patient suffering under trials in martyrdom, helped to show the heathen world the excellence and blessedness of Christianity, as well as its superiority over all other religions, which were but the inventions of men.

In the decline of the empire, paganism fell into discredit, and Christianity with its saving power swept over the land. The national religion, with the emperor at its head was an empty bubble, and soon disappeared before the power of the Holy Spirit. "When they heard of Jesus and the resurrection of the dead, some mocked: and others said, we will hear thee again of this matter." This was to them a new idea in the problem of a future existence. "Forasmuch, said the apostle as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art or man's device. And the times of this ignorance God winked at: but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent; because he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." (Acts 17: 29–31.)

The government of God, the final judgment of all men are assured to us by the fact of Christ's resurrection, which is the pledge of our own. The heathen world mocked at the idea of the resurrection. The philosophers held to the immortality of the soul as the hope of a future life, while the ignorant masses had little or no idea of a future life at all. But on those who sat in darkness the light of immortality shone through the gospel on the ground of the resurrection of the dead. Paganism fell, and Christianity took its place in the Roman empire. At this period the heathen of Greece and Rome, at least the intelligent classes among them, had no real belief in a future state. The vulgar mythology, with its hades and Olympus, its Tartarean blackness, and Elysian sunshine, was an exploded and despised tradition. There was little or no faith in a future retribution. It was only the most ignorant that believed in hades, Tartarus and Elysium.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 4. Received a sad letter from Br. A. Sanford, of Kansas. For some years he and many of the settlers, on the Cherokee Neutral Lands, have been in conflict with the railroad company. The case has been before the United States supreme court for some time, and the decision has just been declared in favor of the railroad company. This throws the settlers out of their homes and improvements. These will now have to purchase their late homes of the railroad company, to hold their improvements. But the worst view of this case is, most of them have nothing to purchase with. They are poor.

In my late visit I had an interview with some of the officers of the railroad, who assured me that all the favor that could be shown the settlers, would be bestowed by the company, both in the prices of lands, and the terms and periods of payment.

A brother in writing says: "I don't know what our people will do, buy, or remove. They are really in as bad a condition, or worse than the sufferers by the late fires in Chicago and Boston, yet we have no sympathy or aid from the cold and heartless outside world. But when the Lord comes, we shall have a 'Land that is fairer than day,' where land monopoly can never enter. Jesus will give us free homes, if we are faithful; and this is now my only hope. Pray for us, that the Lord may direct and sustain us." The settlers have our sympathies in this hour of trial.

To-day, after a conflict of many months in the Presidential campaign, Horace Greeley, one of the candidates, is buried in New York, with all the honors his countrymen can give. President Grant, Vice-president Colfax, members of the cabinet, and a host of the great men of the country attended his funeral. Messrs. Beecher and Chapin were to deliver the addresses. I was acquainted with Mr. Greeley from the age of twenty years, and I have read his paper from the commencement to the present time. It was my choice of all the secular sheets in the country. He took high ground on questions of reform, and more than any other secular paper, advocated the emancipation of the slaves of our country, and, also, universal liberty and education. In allowing himself to be nominated for the Presidency, he was brought into a fierce conflict with both his friends and opposers: and in his defeat he sunk and died, no doubt, with a broken heart. But no man has made a better record for honest and high minded journalism, or done a better work for the masses than he. He has descended to the grave with the respect and love of the American people. As to religion he was a Universalist. In his last hours, when grappling with death, he exclaimed with great distinctness, in the words of Job, "I know that my Redeemer liveth!" which indicated that in his last hours, when done with the world, he had his mind fixed upon the vital question of the future life, and the resurrection.

In the latter part of his life, Mr. Greeley opposed Spiritism, but whether he really embraced the idea of the literal resurrection of the dead, I do not know. But from the quotation of this remarkable passage from Job, it would appear that he favored this view of the Christian's hope.

THURSDAY, Dec. 5. Met with Br. Marston in Rochelle, Ill., at his protracted meeting. They have a pleasant hall for meetings, and the little flock are holding fast the faithful word. They hope for some additions in this meeting, although it is a hard place to work in, prejudice and indifference prevailed to a great extent. Br. M. spoke well on the necessity of faith in order to please God. Br. Burington, of Genoa, came into the meeting at night, and cheered the hearts of many.

FRIDAY, Dec. 6. Br. Marston gave us a good sermon to-night, asking, "Who is on the Lord's side?" In the church-meeting at the close, a number wished to unite with the society, and desired that the covenant should be amended so as to read Advent Christian church, instead of Christian church, so that they could unite with an Advent church in name, as well as in fact. Saturday evening the brethren met to consider the importance of setting things in order in the body. They dissolved the present body, which was without officers, and organized, and set in order the Advent Christian church at Rochelle according to the gospel. Three deacons were ordained, and six new members were added, and more will now come. Br. Marston is cheered by this new arrangement, which it is hoped will give new life and success to the cause here. Visited Br. Akersons, at Jefferson Grove, on Sunday. I was warmly greeted by him and his household. I visited them about twenty years ago. We had a pleasant time in talking of the past. Then father Chapman was with us, the man of God; but he sleeps, while I, with others, toil on. Here I met Br. Blackman, and others of the old stock still waiting for the Lord.

TUESDAY, Dec. 10. I received among my letters to-day, the following from one of my household, which I copy as being of some interest to our many friends:

KAME CITY, PA., Dec. 6, 1872.

MY DEAR HUSBAND: We all hoped you would be able to be with us the first of December. It was the fiftieth universary of the wedding of Ichabod and Mary Handy. He is, as you know, my own, and only brother. I must tell you something about it. We concluded that we would get up a surprise. Walter and some of the Captain's friends in this region, set about the preparation for the "golden wedding." Valuable presents were provided, and all things got in readiness for the occasion. And such was the skill of the leaders that Captain Handy and wife knew nothing of it until the golden presents were presented before them by their friends, with joyful greeting. The conversation, music and general rejoicings continued till a late hour. I was very sorry you could not have been with us.

Notwithstanding the evening was stormy there was a large gathering, and the whole affair passed off splendidly. The house was full, and the tables were loaded. The presents were very beautiful. Among them was the beautiful Bible which you know all about. It took the eyes of all. Nothing occurred to mar the happiness of the occasion.

The scene of to-night has brought the past fresh before my mind. You know, my dear husband, that we were married Nov. 5, 1826, and only four years remain before our "golden wedding" will come, should time continue and we be alive; or if the "Marriage of the Lamb come," it will be more welcome. Think of it! forty-six years of our married life have passed. It seems like a dream. Ours has been a checkered scene. We have had a large family, five of whom we have laid away for the resurrection morning, and four live as a blessing to us. And yours has been a stirring life, full of toil and dangers, with many hardships. A great and good cause has been on your hands most of your public life. As a pioneer, you have been subject to many trials, incident to such a position. And in all my cares at home, I have followed you in your missionary work, with my prayers and sympathy. And there has never been an hour of suffering from the hardness of the work, or the calumny of enemies, that I have not stood by you. Our life has been a unit from first to last, and now more than ever, as life's duties and cares, with life itself are soon to close, the ties of love bind us more strongly than ever. I did hope your enemies would give you the privilege of spending your last days in peace. But soon we shall rest. If ever I could pray, "Thy kingdom come!" with my whole heart, it is now.

By a mutual arrangement, you know, I was to spend a year with my relatives and friends in the East, whom I had not seen for long years. This plan I hope to carry out, wholly, or in part, when I hope we may provide a home in the West, in which to spend the remainder of our days."

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 11. Called at Stanley Hall, 619 West Lake Street, to see Br. and Sr. Mansfield. They informed me that they had taken the Hall for a year, and considered their enterprise for missionary work in this part of Chicago a fixed point. They have rooms connected with the Hall, and will move into them at once, and so be on hand for every good word and work. Their prospects thus far, are good. I attended their evening lecture. It was encouraging. A wide and effectual door is open here. There are thousands all about them without God or hope in the world. May the Lord give them great success in bringing souls to Christ, and a larger place than ever, in the hearts of the Advent people. JOSHUA V. HIMES.

An Exposition of Matthew Ch. 24.

ture form. The place of its manifestation was the mount of Transfiguration. The "eye witnesses of his majesty" were, Peter, James, and John, one of whom, (Peter) plainly declared afterwar [illegible] have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye witnesses of his majesty."

Thus we have the gospel of the kingdom preached at the first advent to one nation, as a witness to them, followed by a miniature exhibition of he kingdom, to that generation. So here is to be a proclamation of the vidences of the speedy advent and kingdom of Messiah to all nations as witness; and this is what we are to understand by this gospel of the kinglom.

What is the world referred to? The word, "world," of frequent occurrence n King James' version, is rendered rom three or four different words in he original, viz: aion, kosmos, oikounence. The last mentioned word is the ne rendered world in the 14th verse. We find the same word in Luke 2:2 here it undoubtedly refers to the Roman Empire. "It came to pass in those ays that there went out a decree from æsar Augustus, that all the world (oikoumence) should be taxed." From is it is quite evident that the Scriptural import of the term may be more mited in its application than classic thors would allow.

The classical definition of oikoumene all the habitable world; but the decree Cæsar Augustus did not extend to l the habitable portions of the earth's urface; but only to that portion over hich the Roman government exercisl a sovereign authority. All the orld in this instance, seems to refer civilized world, or that portion unr the influence of political enlightment.

Adopting this principle, and applyg to our own time, we should say the spel of the kingdom is to be preach- l through the civilized world, for a itness to them and then shall the end me. If this is the correct exposition the text, then the work has been most thtully accomplished within the last lf century. There have been men ised up within the last fifty years o have given their attention to the bject of the signs of the times, and t called upon to give the note of rning to the world, that "another ng, one Jesus," is about to "take to nself his great power, and reign." ightened Europe has been startled h the announcement,—"Behold, He neth with clouds!" The inhabitants cold Siberia have long echoed the [illegible]. Many of the missiona- laboring among the oriental nas of Asia, are believers in, and pro- [illegible] speedy personal reign of ist; while Afric's sons have come ding submissively to the Prince of [illegible], and waiting stand to give him come. The United States and Brit- Provinces have become familiar h this movement, and may we not this gospel of the kingdom is at very time being preached in all the ld for a witness? And if so, shall not look for the end? So sure as ist predicted it, this is God's last k of mercy.

Having given in course an exposition he first fourteen verses of Matthew we now come to the second division of this prophecy. We have before l, that the second division of this phecy is complex, or mixed, and to the real harmony of our Lord's course, we shall be under necessity bringing in some points of the same phetic discourse delivered on another occasion, and recorded by Luke, ch Matthew did not record.

t is evident our Lord repeated his phetic discourse in part or in full on rent occasions, which may account for the seeming disparity in some things. Matthew records the discourse as it was spoken on the Mount of Olives, and Luke as it was delivered in the Temple. See the introduction to the two accounts.

"When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet stand in the holy place (who so readeth let him understand)." (v. 15.)

Now I claim that here is where the complexity of this subject exists. It is by saying that the fifteenth verse of the twenty-fourth of Matthew is the same in subject matter as the twentieth verse of the twenty-first chapter of Luke, which reads,—"And when ye see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains." It will be observed that Luke 21:21 reads like Matthew 24:16. This is the reason why some have supposed that v. 15 in Matthew, and v. 20 in Luke are the same.

But it is evident that the army mentioned in Luke 21:20 cannot be "the abomination of desolation" spoken of by Daniel the prophet, who is quoted by the Savior in Matthew 24:15, for the following reasons:

1. If the standards of the Roman army, being objects of worship, constituted the abomination of desolation, then they were in Jerusalem already; for at that very hour Jerusalem was garrisoned with Roman soldiers, who undoubtedly bore with them their eagles, being their military standards; whereas our Lord referred to the prophecy as a future event, and not as something at that moment transpiring.

2. It would seem that if Christ referred to anything connected with Jerusalem as the holy place, he must have spoken in reference to the Temple, and we have no evidence that the Romans ever planted their standards within the walls of the sanctuary, and if they did, it was not until Jerusalem's actual destruction, which would at once preclude the idea of its being a sign that destruction of the city was near; for it had then already came.

3. The Roman army under Titus; around Jerusalem, could be of no utility to the diciples as a sign, for they had all retired from the city five years before, when Cestus Gallus, the governor of Syria, having besieged the city, raised the siege and departed.

4. The standing of the abomination of desolation in the holy place, is to be the occasion of a great tribulation upon the church of Christ; but the overthrow of the Jewish polity in the destruction of the city was wrath upon the unbelieving Jews, who had been the murderers of our Lord, while true believers were not affected by it; they were peacefully reposing in the mountains of Pella.

Having shown that the abomination of desolation cannot refer to the Roman army under Titus, before divining what it is, we shall endeavour to harmonize the seeming discrepancy. And this I think we are authorized to do by associating Mat. 24:15, with v. 21 of the same chapter; and putting it in the place of v. 15 the 20th verse of Luke ch. 21. And further (as before stated) I think we are warranted to make this disposition of the subject from the consideration that the prophecy of Daniel, quoted by our Savior, presenting the abomination of desolation, is the occasion of a great tribulation. Thus: "And arms shall stand on his part; and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall place the abomination that maketh desolation. And such as do wickedly against the covenant shall corrupt by flatterers but the people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits. And they that understand among the people shall instruct many; yet they shall fall by the sword, and by blame, and by spoil and by captivity, many days," (Dan. 11:31–35.) All must admit that our Lord in Mat. 24:15, cites this passage. And if Mat. 24:15 and Dan. 11:31 refer to the same thing by "the abomination of desolation," why may we not conclude that Dan. 11:33, which presents the falling of many people by blame, spoil and captivity many days; and Mat. 24:21, which brings to view a great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world, also have a synchronous application, or refer to the same event? If so, we say again, it can have no reference whatever to the Roman army which desolated Jerusalen, but must refer to that long period of persecution which came on the church of Christ under the tyrannical reign of the "man of sin."

Now let us read this part of our Lord's discourse and put Lk. 21:20 in the place of Mat. 24:15, and associate v. 15 Mat. 24 with the 21 verse of the same chapter, and see if there is not a manifest harmony which cannot be produced in any other way. Luke 20—"And when ye see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that desolation thereof is nigh." Mat. 24:16—"Then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains. Let him which is on the housetop not come down to take anything out of his house. Neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes. And wo unto them that are with child, and them that give suck in those days. But pray ye that your flight be not in winter neither on the Sabbath day."—v. 15. "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (whoso readeth let him understand)....For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world, no nor ever shall be." To me this looks like a harmony. Jesus in the days of his flesh told his disciples what course to pursue for their own preservation and safety, when they should see Jerusalem compassed about with armies. Cestus Gallus, the governor of Syria, besieged Jerusalem five years before it fell by Titus; but for some unknown cause, says the historian, he raised the siege and departed. The christians (whom Josephus calls "many virtuous people"), recognizing this as the fulfillment of the Savior's prophecy, fled to the mountains of Pella; and five years after when Titus took the city, among the eleven hundred thousand that perished not a Christian was found.—(To be continued.)

ALBION ROSS.

CERTAINLY there is too much truth in the caustic take off Mr Talmage recently indulged on the prevalent practice of selling and renting pews. Read it:—"The sea is covered with wrecks, and multitudes are drowning. We come out with the church life boat, and the people begin to clamber in, and we shout, 'Stop, Stop,! You must think it costs nothing to keep a life-boat. Those seats at the prow are one dollar apiece, those in the middle fifty cents, and those seats in the stern twenty-five cents. Please to pay up, or else flounder on a little longer till the mission-boat, whose work it is to save you penniless wretches, will come and pick you up. We only save first class sinners in this boat.'"

SPANISH PROVERBS: Love, a horse, and money carry a man through this world. Three things kill a man; a hot sun, supper and trouble. To shave an ass is a waste of lather. If the gossip is not in her own house, she is in somebody else's. Don't speak ill of the year till it is over. The mother-in-law forgets that she was once a daughter-in-law. Men are as grateful for kind deeds as the sea is when you fling into it a cup of water.

A GOOD finished scandal, full-armed and equipped, such as circulates in the world, is rarely the production of single coterie. It sees the light in one; is rocked and nurtured in another; is petted, developed, and attains its growth in a third; and receives its finishing touches only after passing through a multitude of hands.

COMMON sense is just as much needed in religion and in religious work as it is in business or in the management of a nation.

The Times.

AT HOME.

..... It is reported, probably with truth, that President Grant is about to issue a special message, urging upon congress the necessity of immediate and vigorous action in reference to the continued depredations of bands of Mexican thieves and murderers crossing the Rio Grande into Texas. These outrages are becoming so frequent and the losses so great that it is due to the citizens of Texas that immediate measures be taken for the protection of their lives and property. If the Mexican government is unable to prevent these depredations, our government will be compelled to adopt a "vigorous policy," and to exact at the hands of that government redress and indemnity.

..... The testimony in the case of the recent railroad disaster on the Pennsylvania Central Road, near Mifflin, shows that what was termed an accident was nothing more nor less than murder. The train that was standing at the depot was half an hour behind time, and the train that ran into it was half an hour ahead of time. The result was a collision between two trains which should have been an hour apart. A clearer case of human butchery, without excuse, was never developed, and yet what hope is there that the guilty parties will ever be punished? No precaution was taken by the conductor of either train, although neither of them was on time, and must have known that danger was to be apprehended at any moment. The Pennsylvania courts have now an opportunity to rebuke the recent boast of a railroad official, that the public has no rights that railroads are bound to regard.

..... Unless sense, honesty, and decency should presently succeed in assuming sway in the political affairs of certain of the Southern States, now torn by contending factions and reckless rival demagogues, the proposition to annex them to Mexico might be in order. Political affairs in Arkansas, Louisiana, Alabama and South Carolina are rapidly approaching a chronic condition of Mexican chaos and confusion, and the rest of the States are getting ashamed of their relationship with them in the national sisterhood. In Arkansas nobody seems to know definitely, half the time, who is Governor or what is what in any department of the State government. In Louisiana two legislatures and two governors are contending for the mastery. In Alabama two rival legislatures are in session, nobody having anything like a clear idea which is the simon pure. And now South Carolina is getting into a disgraceful muddle. One John J Patterson was yesterday elected United States Senator by the legislature, and to-day the fellow is in jail on a charge of having bribed himself into possession of the Senatorship, and a bitter fight is in prospect. It does seem, to a looker on at this distance, that in the South "the experiment of self government" is becoming a failure.—Chicago Journal.

..... Railroad consolidation in the United States will be very shortly so complete that three great interests centering in Wall street will virtually control the entire railroad carrying of the country. These interests are the New York Central, the Pennsylvania Central, and the Baltimore and Ohio Companies. In the case of one of these companies—the Pennsylvania Central—its consolidation under one central power is already on a gigantic scale. It controls no less than sixty three railroads, including those under construction. These roads are nearly all made tributary to the main line from Philadelphia to Pittsburg, while their termini are distributed in nearly every state in the Union. Among the roads under the control of this great corporation are the Union, Central, and Texas Pacifics. The total extent of these sixty-three lines will be nearly 15,000 miles. The aggregate of capital invested in them will be, at least when all the lines are completed, $670,000,000. This is not all. The Central also controls two hundred and fifty miles of canal, and is building a line of four iron ocean steamers of the largest size to run between Philadelphia and Liverpool. This addition to the capital under the control of one central corporate authority will make it scarcely less than $800,000,000, or about one third of the entire national debt of the country. These figures are significant of the vast strides the railroads of the country are making toward a complete monopoly of its carrying trade. An empire within an empire, they virtually threaten the integrity of the State itself. It is worthy of note as a piece of commercial intelligence that all the transcontinental roads will be controlled in Philadelphia.—Inter Ocean.

ABROAD.

..... One of the lessons our civilization has taught the African is shown in the statement that, in a bloody battle just fought in the far interior of Africa many of the savages were armed with Enfield rifles.

..... In some parts of Germany the material condition of the Protestant clergy seems anything but enviable. And it is therefore no wonder that theological studies should be at a discount. According to a memorial of the Metropolitan of Hesse Cassel, Dr. Hochbut, there is in that duchy 482 parsonages, whose incumbents are paid at the following rates: 134 receive 400 thalers (a thaler is 60 cents;) 202 receive 500 thalers; 106 about 600 thalers. Only 40 receive 1000 thalers.

..... Prussian Peers find themselves, like the English Lords, unable to withstand the people and the Ministry, and have at last passed the Counties Reform bill by a vote of 116 to 91. Another move in the struggle between the State and the Church has been made by the government, which has closed all the Catholic churches of Possen and brought the Catholic pastors and teachers of that province to trial, for reading to their charges an inflammatory pastoral letter from their Archbishop.

..... From an article in the Paris Constitutionnel we learn that England has spent the following sums for her wars from the year 1688 to 1815, the period of her greatest power: 1. The war began in 1688 and concluded in 1697, by the treaty of Ryswick, cost 900 millions. 2. The Spanish war of succession from 1702-1713 cost 1 milliard 503 millions. 3. The Austrian war of succession, from 1739-1748, 1 milliard 350 millions. 4. The seven years' war, 1756-1763, 2 milliards 800 millions. 5. The American war, 1775-1783, 3 milliards 600 millions. 6. The war of the French Revolution, from 1793-1802, 11 milliards 597 millions. 7. The war with Napoleon, 1803-1815, 25 milliards 975 millions. The poor rates kept almost even pace with the wars: In [illegible] it was 12 millions; in [illegible], 43 millions, in 1803, 88 millions; and in 1815, 137 millions. Within these 153 years England has, therefore, had 65 years of war which have cost her 72 milliards 537 millions of francs. Of this sum, 51,725,000,000 were met by the revenues of the country, and only 20,210,000,000 by loans

..... Believers in the literal accuracy of the Mosaic narrative of the deluge will be happy to learn that that narrative appears to be corroborated in every essential particular by a record on the Assyrian monument recently translated by Mr. George Smith, of the British Museum. In a lately discovered cuneiform inscription the account of the Deluge is put as a narrative into the mouth of Xisuthrus or Noah. He relates the wickedness of the world, the command to build the Ark, its building, the filling of it, the resting of the Ark on a mountain, the sending out of birds, and other matters. The inscription has several details not given in the Biblical narrative. The discovery of this inscription will go to confirm the opinion generally held by learned men that the Biblical narrative is no imaginative Iliad or Ovidian fable, but a relation of events traditional among Gentiles as well as with the chosen people.

..... The Italian papers bring full details of the ravages committed in the valley of the Po by the fall floods, which have been briefly noted by the cable. The Appenine peninsula has always been the land of inundations. Every spring and fall her rivers suddenly overflow their banks in one place or another, carrying terror and destruction into the adjacent regions. Railway embankments, bridges, culverts, all are swept away, and travel is often interrupted for weeks at a time. But never within the memory of man have the floods been so general and so destructive as they were this last season. Since the last eruption of Vesuvius it seems as if the seasons had been reversed. After the rainy period was supposed to be long past, the rain began to pour down in streams and filled the dry river beds in a few hours. The raging waters overflowed the banks, carried away trees, cottages, houses, and churches, submerging the country for miles and miles. New disasters were reported every day. The inundation of Pisa in 1869, that of Rome, in 1870, and even that of Ferrara, last year, resulted in great damages; but they were isolated and local. In October the destruction was universal: first along the western coast, and then in Tuscany, where the river rose with such unprecedented rapidity that eight persons were drowned in their houses near Florence. The railroad on both sides of the city, the one leading to Pistoja and the one to Livorno were both compelled to supend trafic. This news was followed by equally fatal accounts from Parma, Ferrara—in short from the entire bank of the Po. The crowning calamity was the rise of the Tiber, which destroyed the railroad bridge at Orte. Not only has the loss of property been immense, not only have 60,000 people been made homeless, but the seed sown in the fields of the most fertile portions of Italy has been utterly destroyed.

..... A Berlin writer says: From the numerous reports which the papers seem willing to chronicle, the inference can easily be drawn that somebody is very anxious to witness another war, but finds some difficulty in creating a respectable pretext. If it is not Russia and Prussia against Austria, it is Austria, Turkey and Russia against each other; if it is not a combined attack of the first three powers on the continent in an attempt to crush out of existence the French Republic, it is Bismarck preparing to wrench from England a certain sum of money as an indemnity for a vessel of rice belonging to a German subject, which was destroyed by the Alabama. It is said that Bismarck has been waiting for some time for the decision of the Alabama question before presenting his claims for indemnity. Since the decision is adverse to England, he may lay before that government the Prussian interests as represented in this case. Such announcements, however, can not be of immediate importance. The Prussian authorities have all they can attend to, without embroiling themselves in difficulties in England. England herself has long since ceased to inspire fear in the continental governments. Most of them dislike her; none fear her. She will go to war with nobody, if only let alone. She seeks peace and desires to pursue it. Finding that Russia is fast becoming a rival in naval power, she is desirous of increasing her strength in this respect. The feelings and political relationship between Russia and Prussia are more friendly than they have been for some years, and better than those existing between either of them and Austria. During the last few days the greater part of the Sixth Russian Infantry has been in this city, making a complimentary visit in honor of the fiftieth birthday of Prince Charles, who is the head of the regiment. The custom of making foreign princes the honorary commanders of regiments has been in vogue for some time, and is observed by Russia, Prussia, and Austria. It is regarded as one of the highest compliments which a prince can receive. The Russians are quartered at the Royal Hotel and the palace, and are entertained at the expense of the royal household. Besides creating quite a sensation, they have excited the admiration of the emperor by the manner in which they are equipped. The Prussian army itself is being reorganized with as much activity and exactness as if preparations were actually being made for another war. The soldiers which have been enrolled in Alsace and Lorraine are stationed in parts most remote from their own country, while the soldiers whom Prussia assigns to these provinces are brought from quarters equally remote. This policy has been pursued by Prussia for some time in relation to the provinces acquired of late years. The landwehr also is undergoing thorough reorganization. New officers have already been appointed for the next year.

The Christian Life.

To-Day and To-Morrow.

To Day man lives in pleasure, wealth, and pride,
To morrow, poor, of life itself denied.
To day, lays plans for many years to come,
To-morrow, sinks into the silent tomb.
To-day his food is dressed in dainty forms,
To morrow, is himself a feast for worms.
To day he's clad in gaudy, rich array,
To morrow, shrouded for a bed of clay.
To-day he has delusive dreams of heaven,
To morrow, cries, "Too late to be forgiven!"
To-day he lives in hope as light as air,
To-morrow, dies in anguish and despair.

Knocking Away Props.

"See, father," said a lad who was walking with his father, "they are knocking away the props from under the bridge; what are they doing that for? Won't the bridge fall?"

"They are knocking them away," said the father, "that the timbers may rest more firmly upon the stone piers, which are now finished."

God often takes away our earthly props that we may rest more firmly upon him. God sometimes takes away a man's health, that he may rest upon him for his daily bread. Before his health failed, though he perhaps repeated daily the words, "Give us this day our daily bread," he looked to his own industry for that which he asked of God. That prop being taken away, he rests wholly upon God's bounty. He receives his bread; he receives it as the gift of God.

Great Men.

A GREAT man is always willing to be little. While he sits on the cushion of advantages he goes to sleep. When he is pushed and disappointed, tormented, defeated, he has a chance to learn something; he has been put on his wits, but he has gained facts; he learns his ignorance; he is cured of the isanity of deceit; has got moderation and real skill. The wise man always shows himself on the side of his assailants. It is more to his interest than it is to theirs to find his weak point. The wound cicatrizes and falls off from him like a dead skin, and when they would triumph, lo! he has just passed on invulnerable. As long as all is said against me, I feel a certain assurance of success; but as soon as honeyed words of praise are spoken for me, I feel as one that lies unprotected before his enemies.—Emerson.

That Long Eternity.

HAD Adam commenced counting on the very day he was created, and counted rapidly every day, for twelve hours a day, to the present time, he would not have counted a trillion. And yet a trillion can easily be represented by a line of figures one inch in length. If it takes so long to count the years in a line of figures one inch in length, how long would it take to count the years in a line one mile, ten miles, a hundred miles, a million of miles in length? And if it takes so long simply to count those years, how long will it take to live them?

O eternity! Shall we spend it with God, or lose it utterly?

"ONE should think," said a friend to the celebrated Dr. Samuel Johnson, "that sickness and the view of death would make men more religious." "Sir," replied Johnson, "they do not know how to go about it. They have not the first notion. A man who has never had religion before, no more grows religious when he is sick, than a man who has never learned figures can count when he has need of calculation."

PREACHERS and teachers of all degrees may know the way to the kingdom of God, yet never walk in it, just as a man may know every detail of the railway time-table, and yet never take a journey. Men who spend their lives in preparing other people for heaven, but never advance themselves toward it, may be likened to the inspectors, porters, and other railway servants, who are occupied in setting out travelers, but who themselves never see the ocean or landscape.

Is it hypocrisy, or only thoughtlessness, when one sings,

> "Had I a thousand hearts to give,
> Lord, they should all be thine," while yet he does not give the one heart that he has?

THE churches are in greater need, to-day, of glowing prayer meetings than of eloquent sermons, and we have a glowing meeting when we take glowing souls to it, instead of trying to start the glow after we get there.

News From England.

FROM OUR ENGLISH CORRESPONDENT.

Amid the very sad news which comes to us from all parts, witnessing the degeneracy of the church, and the wickedness of the world, it is refreshing to gather up particulars of individual cases of progress toward truth and greater purity of doctrine. Your readers will know of the meeting of the "Old Catholics" at Cologne. Another meeting has just taken place, by the commencement of the Evangelical Alliance, at Geneva, at which a paper was read by pastor Elmi, a Lutheran clergyman, on the "Old Catholics." It has historical and literative merit, and has been translated and summarized for the Rock. We are glad to find by this paper that the "Old Catholics" are for progress and return to early faith and practice. Using the language of Elmi, we might say, "There is among them progress, slow but real." Dollinger, at the council held at Cologne "declared for the maintenance of the Old Catholic faith as still contained in the Tridentine Symbol," which, though ambiguous, might have embraced the so-called Creed of Pius IV., and therefore also the entire teaching of the Council of Trent, which was a virtual acknowledgment of the creed of Catholicism till nearly our own day. As the author of the paper in question asserts, "At the congress of Munich, a year ago, they seemed to maintain all the decrees of Trent. Since then, and during this winter Br. Dollinger has gone back in his lectures to the first eight centuries; and now at Cologne Hubor has declared that they must return to the primitive age, to the words of Christ and his apostles." There is hope for any who will venture on an expedition to the source of the faith and practice of Christianity. "Moreover, at this congress they have decided on breaking with the Pope and Roman hierarchy, as having become apostate; they have named a committee for appointing new bishops more worthy of the dignity, chosen partly by laymen; they have brought into their worship some use of the vulgar tongue; they recommend the preaching of the gospel without the polemics, whether political or religious; they have declared against image worship, indulgences, and many other abuses.

Our learned author farther delivers himself of this news: "The most important fact during the last winter was the series of lectures delivered by Dollinger at Munich on the reunion of the churches. He spoke in warm admiration of Luther, and offered the most fervent longings for the happy time when th several Christian churches, feeling their own imperfections or faults, should learn from one another what each had preserved of good and true, proposing as a basis of reunion the Holy Scriptures and the General Councils of the first eight centuries. 'Let us hope,' said he with Schelling, 'that after the churches of St. Peter and St. Paul will come that of St, John, which will unite them both.'"

He doubtless means by that of St. John, that of love, as John's whole theme was love

An amusing fact is narrated in connection with the Congress at Cologne: "The Archbishop of Munich went there in person to excommunicate the apostates, but was interrupted when he began to speak, and the citizens forced him to flee in disgrace." This "progress" ensures for the advancing party persecution from the Infallibilists. He says: "I could cite many instances in which Old Catholics have suffered for their faith. Look at the priest Tangermann, who, as poor as sincere, lost his benificence at the age of seventy; look at that directress of a convent at Bonn, who, suspended and cited before the superior of her order, and falling sick on the way, said, when threatened by the sister sent to fetch her with the refusal of nursing and the denial of sacraments unless she submitted, "It is better to fall into the hands of God than into the hands of men; God will have mercy on my soul." And she dies, and Protestant friends bear her to a grave."

The gospel of God, and the religion of Jesus, have one distinguishing feature which no other religion possesses: it is the resurrection of men fallen in death, and the eternal living of the holy of the resurrected. The church of God, possessing this hope, are represented as waiting the day of Christ which brings this resurrection of the dead, and a change in the state of the living saint. But a virtual denial of the faith it is, when the church teaches its children to lay up their pence for their burial. This is a growing error in England. Treating on death instead of life, teaching the flying away of a spirit to heaven and adding to this a laying up in store against the day of burial, it is evermore losing sight of the animation of the true believer—"the hope of life." At Corley, the Bishop of Manchester found 1,352 scholars enrolled, on a Sunday School register, and of these no less than 1,260 subscribed to—not a missionary society, a clothing club, or anything of that kind—nor enrolled as members of a temperance society, but of—a "Burial Fund."

The Rock says: "We consider the collection of children's pence in Sunday School for such a purpose is open to grave objection;" and "it is far more important that children should be taught to live a godly life, and to make provisions for the due fulfillment of its duties, than to heap up money for trappings and decorations to adorn their mortal remains when they are conveyed to their mother earth." So we think. But it is all death with some, and they will act after this death principle—these death principles being their spring of action. Oh, for LIFE.

Yesterday your correspondent listened to a sermon by a celebrated Doctor. The text was from the song of Solomon (1: 3); "Because of the savor of thy good ointment thy name is as ointment poured forth, therefore do the virgins love thee." It commenced with an adulation of the name of Jesus; the preacher referring afterwards to the multifarious states which the name of Jesus fits into. In our depression through sin, our darkness, our adversity, in fact in every circumstance, Jesus has a name that meets our every case. He passed on to the dying hour. He said "Shoot a man through the heart, and he is as much alive as ever. He is not dead. His soul still lives. He has only removed to another place."

I waited for the name that suits to this case, and gave assurance to those left behind that the man was not dead, but he gave us no such name, confirming me in the truth that the intermediate disembodied state is a sheer fancy. Presently we heard of Jesus as the resurrection and life, and here we could rejoin the Doctor. Perhaps some orthodox reader may confer a service by hunting up a name which will make the "unclothed state" fragrant with blessedness, and to be desired. if they find no such name, it may be they will perceive it as presumptive evidence of no such state of existence.

In preparing the holy altar bread, for the most "holy communion," we have the following holy directions given us by a holy sacristan, who has received it from a holy Cowley father:—"ALTAR BREAD—Sir.—In answer to a query in your last impression from 'A Country Vicar,' I beg to suggest the following plan, which was given to me by one of the Cowley fathers. Take a slice of new bread, moderately thick, and roll it well with a glass roller, or an ordinary pastry roller. The former is better for the work. The particles of bread will then be so thoroughly compressed that the bread will hardly crumble at all, and it can be conveniently cut with a knife.

A. SACRESTAN.

Indeed, if you should not with a holy glass roll, or a holy pastry roller, press the particles of the bread together, a crumb might fall on the floor, and a mouse might eat it—a poor church mouse, and then certainly there would be a whole Christ, "body, blood, soul and divinity" in a mouse. And the mouse would have partaken of the "holy communion." This would be a holy horror, and to prevent it, take the advice of the holy Ritualist or Romanist sacristan. This is commended to all the holy, as a holy abomination.

From California.

When I last wrote, we were at Bridgeport, holding meetings. Continued one week; interest good to the close. From there we went to Rockville, in Suisun Valley. We visited this valley two years ago and held meetings three weeks. The whole valley was stirred, on the great Adventist truths and they have wished us to return.

Br. and Sr. Fassett were with us a part of the time, and assisted in preaching the word. The interest was deep, and the congregation increased until the seats would not hold the people. They never heard the gospel on this wise before. Some of the friends sat up till twelve oclock at night reading the Bible, and were out every evening to meeting. They said it was a new book to them, and they loved to read it, because they could now understand it. Four were baptised, and we organized a church and left them rejoicing in hope of the coming kingdom, with others deeply convicted of their sins and of the truth. We shall return again in a few weeks, and shall keep a watch care over them.

From thence we took cars to Sacramento, on our way to Courtland. Having to stop over night in the city, we called on some of the friends, having never been into the city since the society was formed there last winter. We found Dr. Truesdell, who was appointed minister of the society. But to our surprise and sorrow, we learned their meetings had been discontinued since last summer, and those that had once met together were scattered. The Doctor said, of his own accord, that he was not an "Adventist" and never had been; neither was there a society formed as an Advent society, but only a Christian society. He filled the place as preacher till his business increased and demanded so much of his time, that he could not attend to both, and he gave up preaching, as he was in debt and must attend to business. Hence the society was scattered.

We looked around to find some others of the friends, but failed. I hope there are some; but to say the least of it, it is a sad look in that great city. No church or place where the great truths of our Lord's soon coming are proclaimed. I do pray the Lord of the harvest, to send laborers to this coast, that will preach the great truths of the judgment at hand, for nothing else will stand, or hold the people in these days of peril. We passed on with sorrowful hearts to the place of appointment. But the rains set in, and it being a country place, we were obliged to postpone the meeting and return home.

The church here in Santa Clara, is doing well. This is a large field of labor, and doors are opening everywhere and we are all kept busy. O! for more faithful men on this coast. Oh! that the Lord would put his spirit upon some and move them to come. In hope, D. D. & M. S. REED.

A Brother writes from Byron, Wis.

Although personally a stranger to you and not in any way connected with any Advent body or organization, being a member of the Wesleyan Methodist church of this place; yet I felt as though I would like to say a word in favor of THE TIMES and to the dear brethren of the Advent faith, scattered abroad. It is some twenty five years ago since I first gave my heart to the Savior. For a time I became a wayward wanderer from my Father's fold. Having moved to what was then "the far West," and being deprived of church privileges and Christian fellowship, I let go my hold of the gospel hope, whereof I felt I had been made a partaker and an heir to the kingdom. But God, who was rich in mercy towards me, again lifted me up out of the mire and clay and set my feet upon a Rock—for which I would praise his Holy Name.

I first received light, and embraced the cardinal doctrines of Adventism, as believed in and taught by the brethren of the one faith. Although agreeing with them in the main, there were articles of faith and points of doctrine I could not assent to. Having been raised among the Methodists, I remembered their views on the great theme of salvation, having the witness within me that I was born of the Spirit. I could not, dare not, go back of my experience, and deny the agency of the Spirit in the great work of redemption. I therefore thought it prudent and safe to remain where I was although differing from my Methodist brethren on many points of vital interest. A little over a year ago THE TIMES was sent to me by my brother, D. A. Bradley, for three months, on trial. I liked it so well that I became a subscriber myself, and now, at the close of the year, I find myself in accord with most, if not all, of the great and glorious truths it advocates.

Brethren and sisters, it is in my heart to live and die with you. I am endeavoring, by the grace of God, to adorn the doctrines I profess by a holy life and godly conversation. Suffer a word of exhortation: Having greater light, will not more be required at our hands? Let us be faithful to the trust committed to our charge; and, in view of the great and stirring events which are coming upon the earth, may they not be to us golden opportunities for for saving perishing souls, that shall be jewels in our Savior's crown at his coming and kingdom? And, if we are faithful, in the day of his manifestation and power he will give to us a crown of life.

From J. Palmer.

As I am cheered from week to week by reading communications from brethren and sisters scattered through the land, I thought it might be interesting to some to hear how the little church is in Sparta, Wis. The brethren are strong in the faith of the near coming of Christ to establish his kingdom under the whole heavens, to raise the sleeping saints, change the living, give them immortality, and make them heirs of the kingdom forever. Glorious thought. We see the rapid fulfillment of the last signs, that were to cause men's hearts to fail them for fear, looking after the things that are coming upon earth. What can w[illegible] l[illegible]ok for next but the shaking o[illegible]owers of the heavens, and to se[illegible]n of man coming in the cloud[illegible] heaven, with power and great g[illegible] M[illegible]y the Lord keep us in his love [illegible] patient waiting, that when he who is the saint's life shall appear, we may appear with him in glory.

Eld. Thurber closed his labors with us the first of September. We were left for a few weeks without a minister. During that time, Br. Branch was with us one Sabbath, and Br. Collins two Sabbaths, and preached to good acceptance. Since then, we have had Eld. Alanson Foster to preach for us. Br. Foster has been a minister of the Methodist church for over thirty years. During the last year he got (by some means) one of Eld. Collins "Address to the M. E. Conference," and the truth and spirit of the work so affected his mind that he set himself to searching the Bible as never before. He saw his former views of endless torment and the intermediate state could not be sustained from the Bible; therefore as an honest man and a Christian he must preach the truth as it is revealed in God's word. He could not remain in the church where he had preached so many years; he therefore chose to come out and not put them to the trouble of turning him out. He and his wife are now members of the Advent Christian church in Sparta. He is astonished that he has never before seen the light that shines so clearly on God's word.

Lord let thy light and thy truth shine forth!

Your brother, waiting for immortality at Christ's coming.

A Friend writes from the East:

While in Minnesota I was called upon to conduct the funeral of a very kind but utterly irreligious man—a difficult place to fill. In my remarks I tried to do my duty to the living, enforcing the lesson of the sudden blow—a case of apoplexy. In riding to the grave I found in my companion—a regular church attendant—an infidel of the Roman school. His position was that "Christ was not divine, but the model man," etc.

"Then you make him a liar, for he claimed to be such."

"He did not intentionally deceive."

"Then a weak man, lacking in sound sense is your 'model man;' an unfortunate dilemma; and if you are mistaken, something worse; for your whole future is unfulfilled. There is no life but through this Savior."

He could not believe what he could not understand; hence rejected the story of Christ's birth. His reason rejected it.

"But you do in physical science. What was not understood a hundred years ago, was yet true, and is accepted now. And what we accept and do not now understand of physical truth, we may yet understand."

I find much infidelity and Universalism—or Restorationism—more than I expected to. I think, however, there are indications of more willingness to look into our views, among Western than Eastern ministers. I trust the reform may make steady progress.

From James Ferris.

For the benefit of many dear friends after inquiries of my whereabouts, who say they seldom see or hear from me through the paper, I never was much of a hand to advertise myself, or to publish every little thing that is done in the cause of the Lord ten miles around where I labo[illegible] and attribute it to my work. How much the Lord accomplishes through me as a poor instrument, I cannot say; and it is a wise man who can tell that what good is accomplished in his field, is throug[illegible] him. "Paul plants, Apollos waters, but God gives the increase." Bles[illegible] his name. There have been seven baptized in the churches this year, where I labor. Others are ready. One church organized. I am still traveling over two hundred and fifty miles a month, supplying four churches with preachers, two of them on the same day seven miles apart, hoping that the good Lord will bring some good out of it. I still reside at Buchanan. The church here has no pastor, is united and in as good condition as I have seen them in three years. I give them a Sabbath's labors when I can. Good congregations at preaching. I pray the Lord to send them a good pastor.

From N. J. Sade.

Since I came to this country I have been talking, scattering "gems" and Advent papers, which have been the means of many calls for labor and tracts, which I have not been able to give, as my financial condition will no allow it. I have to support myself and wife by day labor, therfore cannot gives them the tracts they desire. But in the Sabbath school I have done my duty as teacher, and find no opposition, only by one man, a class leader. He sustains his points, not by the Bible, but by the testimony of "great men," as he terms them, which does not satisfy the people. I am yet young, but feel the burden of the many people crying for help and the truth as we see it; and I have come to the conclusion that if I can have the prayers and sympathies of the Advent people at large (as I am sure I shall) I will begin public work, at least until the Lord sends a man more capable than I am, to this destitute region. And I hope that may be soon. My ADVENT TIMES and tracts are almost gone, with a few seeking the "light." Could you not send some tracts and books to dispose of.

From John S. Dimmitt, Minnesota.

I am but a babe in the cause, but as others have done, by the grace of God I hope to grow in the light and knowledge of the truth. Would God that the brethren would take hold of the work of the Lord with more eagerness than ever before. May God bless them in the good cause, and they be made to rejoice in hope of eternal glory.

I would say, that since Br. Edwin's death we have but very little preaching in Ottawa. Nevertheless there are a few here of like precious faith who are willing to work for their Lord and Master, believing him able and also willing to save even the vilest sinners who will seek his glory. He is able to save them and give them an inheritance in the coming kingdom, which is to be set up on the earth. Oh! how I long to meet my brethren there. I have some dear ones who have passed away. It is there I hope to meet them. We will have no sickness, no loving ones taken from us there. We shall not stand by the bed of our friends and bid them farewell, nor will our dear little ones be taken away from us. Let us all be faithful; the prize lies at the end of the race.

From J. M. Bowling, Gallatin, Ill.

Br. Wm. McCullock commenced a meeting for the organization of a church at this place, under unfavorable circumstances, in the midst or rather the latter part of a political contest, also the orthodox notions of the people of the country, on the 24th day of October, and continued two weeks. Br. Wm. McCullock is a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. He shunned not to declare the whole truth and counsel of God. And under his bold and spirited preaching the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, an interest was soon manifested which continued and ever increased till the meeting closed, notwithstanding the excitement of politics and the emissaries of satan and the combined efforts of sectarianism. The immediate results are eleven; part by confession and immersion, part by letter and confession; a church was organized, the community aroused to an investigation of the things which pertain to life and salvation. Where shall we find a reaper, for indeed the "harvest is great?"

From H. F. Cordell, Iowa.

I can testify that many mysteries are removed by careful study of the Word of God. When I believed that man was immortal, then it was a mystery to me how the wicked could become ashes or burned up root and branch, and be ashes under the feet of the righteous; and I had the same difficulty with other passages besides this from Malachi. Now I have learned that man is mortal, and I see my way clear, while I hold the same hope Paul enjoyed and cherished—that of the resurrection of the dead.

From David Young, Minnesota.

I am glad to say to all God's children that I am living by the faith of the Son of God, and have life in his name. I feel that the gospel is the power of God to me. I believe that I am a child of God, and for this I wish to praise him in the assembly of his saints, and wait for his Son from heaven, even Jesus who delivered us from the wrath to come.

Practical Points.

1. Take several first-class papers. If you can read, you have no right to rob yourself of good, nourishing, literary food. If you cannot read get some one to read for you. There is no excuse for remaining in ignorance, amid the blazing light of the nineteenth century. Do not allow your penuriousness to close up the avenues of knowledge, and thus secure to yourself and to others the sad legacy of mental dwarfishness and spiritual starvation. A few dollars a year spent in useful books and papers may be of untold value, not only for the positive knowledge imparted, but for the influence they will exert in forming the habits of your children. If you do not wish your sons and daughters to contract a relish for vain amusements and reckless society, furnish them with something better.

2. Pay for the papers you take. Publishing is costly business. The majority of people have no correct idea of the amount of labor and money expended in producing every paper that is issued. Secular papers, with a large amount of advertising, are enabled to meet their heavy bills without embarrassment. It is very different with a religious paper, which depends for support almost entirely upon the subscription money, which comes in small amounts. The publisher of such a paper ought always to be paid in advance. He generally finds it hard enough to get through, even then. But when hundreds or thousands take his paper a whole year before they pay a cent, it increases the burden very materially. Even this, however, is not the worst side of the picture. Some people will take a paper six months or a year, and then, without paying for the past, sometimes without even a decent apology, will snarl out—"Stop my paper!" Of course we comply with their request. We can afford to lose what is due, if they can afford to meet the record in the great coming day.

3. Help to make your paper better. Not only does the publisher need your sympathy and financial aid, but the editor needs your prayers, your patience, and your pens, to help him in his responsible work. He needs your pens. The editor must not be left to furnish all the matter of a paper. Even if he had the time and the ability to do this, it would not be best on the whole. Those who write derive a personal benefit from the effort thus put forth, whether their productions ever come to light or not. Many have begun on a very small capital, and have gained strength by exercise, until they have at length become vigorous and instructive writers. Do not get discouraged because you cannot set all creation in a blaze by the first scintillations of your unpracticed pen. Should your article be mutilated by the editor, or even adjudged to be fit only for the waste-basket, it will be a good test of your patience. Try again. There is a class of readers that ought to get under deep conviction on this subject of using the talents God has given them. They can write, but, as a rule, they will not. The world needs to be warned, the church needs to be warned, the paper needs the variety and inspiration which they have the power to impart, but still their pens are allowed to rust! O ye tired and retired watchers by the way, listen to the voice that calls to action, and enter the field that stretches out before you! Dip that long-neglected pen deep in the ink horn of a Savior's love, and trace in lines of light the precious lessons which the Spirit and the Word may suggest. Exposition, argument, exhortation, and experience, are all needed to advance the cause of God.—A. A. P. in Bible Banner.

The Atheist and the Flower.

When Napoleon Bonaparte was Emperor of France, he put a man by name of Charney into prison. He thought Charney was an enemy of his goverment, and for that reason deprived him of his liberty. Charney was a learned man, and as he walked to and fro in the small yard into which his prison opened, he looked up to the heavens the work of God's fingers, and to the moon and stars which He ordained, and exclaimed, "All things come by chance!" One day, while pacing his yard, he saw a tiny plant just breaking the ground near the wall. The sight of it caused a pleasant diversion to his thoughts. No other green thing was within his enclosure. He watched its growth every day. "How came it here?" was his natural inquiry. As it grew, other queries were suggested. "How came these delicate little veins in its leaves? What made its proportions so perfect in every part, each new branch taking its exact place on the parent stock, neither too near one another nor too much on one side."

In his loneliness, the plant became the prisoner's teacher, and his valued friend. When the flower began to unfold, he was filled with delight. It was white, purple, and rose-colored, with a fine silvery fringe. Charney made a frame to support it, and did what his circumstances allowed to shelter it from pelting rains and violent winds.

"All things come by chance" had been written by him upon the wall just above where the flower grew. Its gentle reproof as it whispered, "There is One who made me so wonderfully beautiful, and He it is who keeps me alive," shamed the proud man's unbelief. He brushed the lying words from the wall, while his heart felt that "He who made all things is God."

But God had a further blessing for the erring man through the humble flower. There was an Italian prisoner in the same yard, whose little daughter was permitted to visit him. The girl was much pleased with Charney's love for his flower. She related what she saw to the wife of the jailor. The story of the prisoner and his flower passed from one to another, until it reached the ears of the amiable Empress Josephene. The Empress said, "The man who so devotedly loves and tends a flower cannot be a bad man;" so she persuaded the Emperor to set him at liberty.

Charney carried the flower home, and carefully tended it in his own green-house. It had taught him to believe in God, and had delivered him from prison.

"All things bright and beautiful,
All creatures, great and small,
All things wise and wonderful,
The Lord made them all."

Romish Priests and Education in Great Britain.

Some benevolent Christians, among whom Mr. H. Keane was prominent, opened a school some twenty years ago in Kilitrellig, a benighted part of County Clare. Many of the Roman Catholics gladly availed themselves of this boon. This greatly irritated the Rev. Michal Meehan, P. P., of Carrigaholt, who, on a Sunday, in the chapel of Cross, County Clare, Ireland, quenched the candles, rang the bell, and pronounced the following curse:

"I pray God to pour down all vengence on those who sent their children to Kilitrellig school last week, particularly two. May the devil be their guide on the right hand and on the left, lying and rising, in bed and out of bed, sitting and standing, within and without. May all misfortunes attend their families and labours; and any person or persons sending their children to this school henceforth, may they be struck blind and deaf, so as never to see any of their children again, and may the children sent to the school go wild (mad). May they never leave the world until they become such examples as that the marrow may come through their shin-bones. May they be pained both standing and sitting and may they never leave this world until they be in such a state that the dogs could not bear coming near their carcas when dead.

"I pray to God that every child that goes to this school, may have his life curtailed a twelvemonth for every day he spends in it, and that they may never enjoy the year of maturity; and as for those people who send their children to school, may their crops and their goods be taken by the devil; and may all these misfortunes attend any person taking their posterity in marriage thirty years hence.

"As the minister of God I pray the Almighty to hear this prayer. I now strictly command this congregation to kneel down and pray to God grant my prayer."

The school was deserted for a month, and then about twenty Roman Catholic children returned. When this curse was published in the Clare Journal and copied by other papers, the priest denied that he had cursed them for past conduct, declaring he intended it to apply only to those, who should send their children in future; but several respectable and independant members of Father Meehan's congregation, who were present when he pronounced the curse, verified the report as given in the papers against the Reverend Father.

The only crime of the children attending the Kilitrellig School, Kilrush, Clare, Ireland, was that they read God's Word.

Bad Manners in Church.

True, bad manners ought to be reformed, but then this is not the minister's business, except incidentally. Bad manners do not necessarily show indifference to salvation. That man in the gallery with his feet upon the back of the seat before him, may be very much interested. That woman who came in late has, perhaps, never had her sense of time educated. The good elder who went around to snuff the candles just at the climax and closing of the services did not know that he was snuffing out the impression of the preacher's laborious efforts. These awkward ones do not look upon their conduct as we look upon it. There are very few refined people in the world, but there are a great many who need to be saved, and who want to be saved. And shall refinement be made a condition of salvation, and men be left without the gospel until they are civilized? What then will become of the heathen? And yet Satan uses these trifles to tempt ministers to discouragement. A fastidious taste is offended, and because people do not sit aright, or come and go with the regularity of clock-work, we leap to the conclusion, "there is no fear of God in this place." No one thinks of bad manners at a fire, and when they are trying to remove children and infirm persons out of the burning house. The minister's business is to pluck sinners out of the fire, and he must not allow any squeamishness to retard his taking hold of them and getting them by the shortest way to a place of safety.—W. E. B., in Chris. Observer.

A MAN was swearing angrily on the corner of the street, when a little girl came along. She stopped a moment, looked up at him, and said: "Please, sir, don't call God names, because he is my Father, and it hurts me to hear you call him hard names." It was now the man's turn to stop and look and pretty soon he said: "Thank you, miss. My mother taught me that he is my Father, too. I will not swear again, never," and he walked quickly away with his head down.

Our Young Folks.

A Word for the Children.

Children make your mother happy,
Make her sing instead of sigh,
For the mournful hour of parting
May be very, very nigh.

Children, make your mother happy;
Many griefs she has to bear;
And she wearies 'neath her burdens—
Can you not these burdens share?

Children, make your mother happy;
Prompt obedience cheers the heart,
While a willful disobedience
Pierces like a poisoned dart.

Children, make your mother happy,
On her brow the lines of care
Deepen daily—don't you see them?—
While your own are smooth and fair.

Children, make your mother happy;
For beneath the coffin lid,
All too soon her face, so saint-like,
Shall forevermore be hid.

Bitter tears and self-upbraidings
Can not bring her back again,
And remorseful memories
Are a legacy of pain.

Oh, begin to-day, dear children;
Listen when dear mother speaks,
Render quick and sweet obedience
For your highest good she seeks—

Loves you better than all others,
For your sake herself denies;
She is patient, prayerful, tender,
Gentle, thoughtful, true, and wise.

Never, while you live, dear children,
Though you search the rounded earth,
Will you find a friend more faithful
Than the one who gave you birth.

Little Freddy and his Penny.

"Mother, I've got a penny; may I go and spend it?" asked little Freddy, one day, as he twirled the new, bright coin in his fingers.

"What do you wish to get with it, my son?" asked his mother.

"Oh! I don't know," said he, casting his eyes down. "A stick of candy."

"You know, Freddy," said his mother, "I don't like you to eat candy; and there is nothing else you can get for a penny that you will care for at all five minutes after you get it. I do wish, my son, that your pennies did not trouble you so much."

"Trouble me, mother! How do they trouble me?"

"As soon as you get one, you want to spend it, Freddy, and, as you can't do so without displeasing me or doing yourself harm, I think they are more trouble than pleasure to you."

"Oh, dear!" said Freddy, throwing himself down on the floor, and drawing a long sigh, "I don't know what to do. I'm sure I wish I could spend my money."

"Freddy," said his mother, "did you ever think how much good your pennies might do if you would only save them till you get a good many of them together, and then give them to some poor person, or buy a nice book to give to some poor child who has no books, as you have?"

"Why, mother, I never thought of that," said Freddy, brightening up. "I'll try to save my pennies after this, and see what good I can do with them."

Freddy ran into his own little room, and dropped his penny into a small box which stood on the table. After this, he went on carefully gathering up the fragments. Whenever a penny was given him, he would put it into his box. He told his mother, one day, that the pennies didn't trouble him any more, since he had found what to do with them. He liked to get money and save it, that he might do good with it.

One day, about two or three months after this, Freddy came home from school in a great hurry. He ran into the house, and, without stopping to speak to any one, rushed into his room, seized his money-box, emptied it, and was off again before his mother had time to notice what he was doing. In about half an hour he came back again looking very bright and happy.

"Why, Freddy," said his mother, "what does all this mean? Why did you run into the house and fly out again without stopping to speak to any one?"

"Oh! mother, please excuse me. I was in such a hurry, I forgot all about it. I wanted my pennies to buy a new slate for little Sallie Brown. She fell down and broke hers just as she was coming out of the school room. You know the people she lives with don't love her, and would have whipped her if she had carried home the broken one. So I told her not to cry, but walk slowly on, and I would get her a new one in a few minutes. I was in such a dreadful hurry, because her mistress would scold her if she wasn't home at the usual time. I am so glad, mother, that I followed your advice, and saved my pennies! I'm sure it was nicer to help poor Sallie in her trouble than to have had all the candy in town to eat."

Freddy remembered his mother's good advice in after life. He kept on gathering up the fragments, and so often had it in his power to do good to others in a way that made him feel truly happy.—Rev. Dr. Newton.

Conference Minutes

IOWA.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT Q. M.

The adjourned session met with the Elk Valley church, Nov. 15. Called to order by the Secretary, and opened by prayer by Br. Ridley.

Winter had come on very suddenly, finding the majority of the people unprepared, hence most of the churches reported by letter. These were in good working condition, being determined to live and to do for God.

The church at Manchester received strength and help from our annual campmeeting and conference held this year with them, and have since secured the labors of Br. R. J. Ridley as pastor, and find themselves growing in grace; increasing in the knowledge of the truth, and the Lord is adding to their numbers such as shall be saved. This church was the first to respond to the call of the annual conference for a mission fund. God will bless them, for he loveth the cheerful giver. We hope others, yea, all of the churches in the conference will feel it a duty to co operate with the annual conference in establishing missions according to the resolution passed. Brethren, we should not stand a bankrupt treasury any longer.

Eld. Ridley was received into the conference, also the church at Clarksville, organized by I. Adrian Nov. 1, with 15 members; S. Cronce, Elder; Dr. Sidenor, Deacon; J. B. McKee, Clerk.

Report of the ministers was encouraging, spiritually, but discouraging financially, especially that of our evangelist, who, by the blessing of God, had accomplished good in the name of Jesus at the various places he had visited.

Officers chosen for the ensuing year were H. H. Janes, President; M. J. Janes, Secretary; I. Body, Treasurer.

Adjourned to meet with the church at Boylan's Grove, on Thursday eve., before the first full moon in Jan '73.

Our quarterly meetings are a great blessing in the hand of God wherever held. Let them be sustained by your presence.

MARTHA J. JANES, Sec'y.

MICHIGAN.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT Q. M.

The second Q. M. was held in Woodbridge, Hillsdale Co., J. R. Preston, Chairman pro tem. Ministers present were Elds. J. R. Preston, Quimby, and Fox. Delegates, Brs. Taylor and English from abroad, and J. B. Abbott, of Woodbridge. Churches represented, Woodhull, Rives, Montpelier, and Woodbridge. Reports of churches not so cheering as we could wish. Many are without a preacher but are striving to live and do the best they can. At Woodbridge the interest is increasing and extending to the regions beyond. They have engaged a preacher for the present conference year.

Regrets were felt that the neighboring churches were not represented.

Voted that the next Q. M. be held in Rives, Jackson Co., time to be arranged by the Secretary and notice given. We hope to see representatives from all the churches in the district and as many from abroad as can come.

C. FOX, Sec'y.

NOTHERN DISTRICT Q. M.

The second Q. M. for the present year was held with the church in Hesperie, Nov. 29, 30. D. Weaver, Chairman pro tem A. W. Lamson, L. D. Weaver, and E. N. Bliss, business committee. A. Amos, R. Burtenshaw, and H. Bush, devotional committee. Br. T. J. Giddings, of Anteim Co., was received by letter as a member of the conference.

Millbrook, Hinton, Ashland, Denver, Hesperie, Leavitt, and White Water churches were represented.

Considering the plague among the horses, the bad roads and stormy weather, we had a fair turn-out and a good meeting. The Lord blessed.

Adjourned to meet in Hinton the Friday before the full moon in February.

E. B. SCOTT, Sec'y.

Business Department.

Accounts Due.

There is a large sum due on Book Accounts, in sums varrying from one to fifty dollars and upwards. Prompt payment will greatly relieve our finances. It is only a little for each one; but the aggregate is a large amount.

Some to whom we sent 'Statements of Account' last summer have never made any reply at all. We want to hear from you, and soon. These many little items make up a heavy burden for us to carry. 'Let every one bear their own burden,' and our own will be very much lighter.

Renew Your Subscriptions.

We are sending notices to all our subscribers whose time expires this year. In some cases we receive remittances after these notices are prepared and forwarded to the postoffice. If any receive notices after they have sent in their renewals, they can keep the 'return envelope' for another occasion

We have waited patiently upon hundreds of our subscribers for months, and, in some cases two years or more. We trust now every one will promptly remit for past dues, and for six months or a year in advance.

The Destiny of Man.

We have examined this work by Br. Wm. Erwin, of the Methodist church, and ordered a supply to accommodate our customers. The author takes up the Scriptures, or most of them which bear directly upon the subject indicated, and searches to know the mind of the Spirit. A large number of copies of the work have been sold among Christians of other churches and it cannot fail to do good. It is finely printed, and bound in full gilt. Price by mail, prepaid, $1.50.

GOOD BLACK INK, is a thing much sought for, and not always found. I called upon Dr. L. M. Thomas, Reading, Mich., a short time since, who gave me a sample of his Black Ink, for trial. I find it to be an excellent article. I can commend it. For schools, or mercantile use, or for editors, it is the best thing I have seen. The Doctor is an old friend, and a reliable business man. Send orders to L. M. Thomas, Reading, Michigan. J. V. HIMES.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an inquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R.," running from Chicago through Galesburg to Burlington, has achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Route to the West. At Burlington it connects with the great Burlington Route which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Chicago on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the C. B. & Q. and Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

An Exposition of Matthew Ch. 24.

[Third Article.]

In the eighth of Daniel, we have presented the Roman power, both in its Pagan, and Papal form. And this may be seen by comparing the vision with the interpretation given by the angel, as follows:

"Then I lifted mine eyes, and saw, and behold there stood before the river a ram, which had two horns, and the horns were high, but the one was higher than the other and the higher came up last." (Dan. 8: 3.)

Interpretation (v. 20):—"The ram which thou sawest, having two horns, are the kings of Media and Persia."

Vision (v. 5):—"And as I was considering, behold an he-goat came from the West, upon the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground; and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes. And he came to the ram that had the two horns, which I had seen standing before the river, and he ran unto him in the fury of his power. And I saw him come close unto the ram, and he was moved with choler against him, and smote the ram, and brake his two horns; and there was no power in the ram to stand before the goat, but he cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him; and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hands. Therefore the he-goat waxed very great, and when he was strong the great horn was broken, and for it came up fuor notable ones toward the four winds of heaven."

Interpretation (vv. 21, 22): "And the rough goat is the king of Grecia, and the great horn that is between his eyes is the first king. Now that being broken, whereas four stood up out of the nation, but not in his power."

Vision (v. 9): "And out of one of them came forth a little horn, which waxed exceedingly great toward the south, and the east, and toward the pleasant land."

Interpretation (v. 23): "And in the latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, shall stand up." The king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, here referred to, must represent the Roman power.

Vision (v. 10): "And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven, and it cast some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them." This same power is represented in another form under the symbol of a great nondescript beast, having great iron teeth and nails of brass, and stamping the residue with his feet.

Without doubt this belongs to the "it" vision, and represents the Pagan Roman power. But v. 24 in the interpretation, it appears to me, can only have its fulfillment in the Papal Roman power. Let us carefully read the verse and its connection and consider its contents:

"And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power, and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper and practice, and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people." "And his power shall be mighty," but not his own civil or military power; i. e., the power of the Pope shall be mighty, but not by his own civil or military power; but such will his influence with kings and emperors be, that he will, through them, wield the civil arm in destroying wonderfully the mighty and the holy people. Has not this application of the prophecy demonstrated in the history of the Papal hierarchy? Pagan Rome cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, in causing three millions of the saints to be put to death during the ten persecutions, but Papal Rome has taken away the daily sacrifice, by instituting a human mediatorship instead of Christ, and destroyed wonderfully the mighty and the holy people, by causing the earth to drink the blood of more than fifty millions of the saints of the Most High.

The abomination of desolation is something inaugurated in the place of the daily sacrifice, which will lead us to inquire what "the daily sacrifice" means.

This form of speech, no doubt, was taken from the old dispensation arrangement, or tabernacle worship. We learn that there were two kinds of service under the first Testament, viz.: the daily and the annual, both of which were significant of the ministry of the new.

1. The annual sacrifice made by the High Priest at the end of every year, typifies the one sacrifice for sin made by the Son of God in the end of the Jewish dispensation, in the offering up of himself. "Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the High Priest entered into the holy place every year with the blood of others. For then must he have often suffered from the foundation of the world; but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." (Heb. 9: 25, 26.)

The daily sacrifice which was a lamb offered morning and evening, represents the daily mediation of Christ.

"There is one God and one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus." Again it is said, "He ever liveth to make intercession." The intercessory work and position of Chrst is a holy office or place. None have a right to stand there but God's holy Annointed, our Lord Jesus Christ. Hence, when we see men standing, or pretending to stand there, and in their arrogant pretensions sustained by the civil and military authority, may not that constitute the abomination of desolation standing in the holy place? or as recorded by another evangelist, standing where it ought not?"

The Pope of Rome has arrogated to a work and titles which alone belong to Christ. He claims to be the head of the church. He claims supremacy and infallibility. He claims the right of purging the church of hersey and heretics. Hence, in the maintenance of his blasphemous pretensions, he has waged a religious war upon the saints, and inflicted upon them tribulation such as never was from the beginning of the world, no, nor ever shall be. How striking the prediction: "Then shall be great tribulation," i. e. when you see the abomination of desolation standing in the holy place.

This tribulation is to be greater than the church has ever experienced before, in two respects: (1) As to its duration, and (2) as to its severity. This power was to wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws, and they were to be given into his hands until a time, times, and the dividing of times, which covers a period of 1260 years.

This is a marked tribulation. The church has passed through periods of severe trial before, but none so long and cruel as the one denominated the Papal tribulation. The church in Egypt was subject to persecution, likewise during the reign of the Judges there were seasons of bondage and trial. Also, the Babylonian captivity was a period of seventy years tribulation. So the ten persecutions under Pagan Rome; the last of which was the most severe of any, and covered a period of ten years. But the persecutions under Papal Rome cover a period of more than twelve centuries, during which time more than 50,000,000 were martyred.

There are two good reasons why we can never experience another tribulation like the foregoing, and (1), there will not be time enough; for unless we have erred in our interpretation of the prophetic periods, we have some time since passed the 1260 years, which brings us within seventy-five years of the end of this age. (2), Although the Man of Sin may have the disposition to persecute the church, he has not the power; for judgment long since sat upon the Little Horn power, and they have taken away his dominion to consume and destroy unto the end.' (To be continued.) ALBION ROSS.

The Future.

The world hastens on to the revelation of two mysteries,—the mystery of godliness and the mystery of iniquity. Till the time of revelation comes both continue mysteries; they are seen only dimly and in outline. We know their general features, but cannot make out details. We know the end, but we do not know the successive steps by which that end is to be reached.

All religious persons admit that it is the purpose of God that defines the course of human history, and that, therefore, all knowledge of the future must come from revelation. Thoughtful and sagacious men may, indeed, from a diligent study of the past and a careful survey of the present, form some correct judgment as to the probable course of events, but their anticipations embrace only the immediate future. What shall be a hundred, or even fifty, years hence, only the very bold attempt to foretell.

Yet, with all this confessed ignorance, it is remarkable that a great many persons, who pay very little regard to revelation, and who perhaps deny the possibility of prophetic inspiration, have very distinct and definite anticipations of what the history of our race is to be. They speak with the utmost assurance of the condition of the world centuries hence, and predict changes which time will bring with a confidence that leaves no place for doubt.

Singularly enough these predictions are all in one direction. They all speak of the increasing prosperity and happiness of the race. It is assumed as axiomatic that development is the law of humanity, and that the future must be far better and happier than the past. Beginning in the weakness of infancy, the race is rising into the strength of manhood, and all that it has yet accomplished is but the play of children compared with the achievments of its riper age.

These expectations are very general. They are by no means confined to those who reject scripture revelation. They have so wrought themselves into the popular thought that very few escape their influence. Many, perhaps, even look upon them as the genuine product of Christianity. The "good time coming" of the philosophic reformer is identified in their minds with the millennium of the inspired prophet.

This is a very sad mistake. Christianity does not identify development and redemption. It knows nothing of the progressive unfolding of humanity. Its starting point is the Cross,—its very first lesson is that man is dead in trespasses and sins. Humanity as in us is unclean, corrupt,—it must be crucified. There is in it no power of moral development but the development of evil. Its manhood is distinguished from its infancy only in the greater intensity of its wickedness.

Christianity utters no eulogies on fallen human nature. As man was made he was a sinless and noble creature, but now is he under the law of sin and death. "Without shedding of blood there is no remission." This is the lesson which God has been teaching man from the day of the Fall. Not to glory in fallen humanity, or to trust in it, but to feel its weakness, its sinfulness, and to give it up to be crucified,—this is what God would have us do.

The old must perish, but God provides something far better. He sent his own Son to be made man, and sent him to be the second Adam, the new head of the race. In him is life, and this life he would give to all the children of men. In being made partakers of this new life we are made dead to the old. The old man is crucified with Christ, that the body of sin may be destroyed. He that is in Christ Jesus is a new creature. And the life received in Christ is something infinitely higher and nobler than that inherited from Adam, and will in time manifest itself in such fullness of activity, and such richness of fruit, that the best man has yet done will not be mentioned or come to mind. The infancy of humanity is not chronological, but moral. Its weakness is a weakness of sin, not ignorance; its development is growth into holiness. It cannot be quickened except it die. A new life must be poured into it, even the life of the Incarnate Son of God.

The vital forces are thus active in the world,—the one bringing into exercise and manifestation all the powers of fallen humanity, the other bringing forth all the powers of regenerate humanity. When these forces shall have effected their ends, then will have come the revelation of the mystery of godliness and of the mystery of iniquity, of the kingdom of Satan and of the kingdom of God, of the Christ and of the Antichrist.

It is one of the delusions of the time to confound these two estates of humanity—the fallen and the regenerate—and to attribute to the former what belongs only to the latter. What is said by the Scripture of the blessedness yet to be on earth is inseparably connected with renevation, not with development. Anticipations of universal prosperity and peace, based upon the gradual improvment of society, and the enlargement of man's natural powers, are mere dreamings and dotings. The last days, according to the uniform testimony of Scripture, are most dark and perilous days,—a time of tribulation, of judgment, and of terror.

It is hard to say these things, but it is no time to take from Christianity its stern words of rebuke, to silence its note of warning.—What we have to do is not to give counsel to God, but to declare his revealed purpose, and the more plainly the nearer that purpose comes to its end.—The Churchman.

A GOOD man shall have what he needs, not always what he thinks he needs. Providence intends the supply of our necessites, but not our desires. He will satisfy our wants, but not our wantonness. When a thing is not needful a man cannot properly be said to want it; when it is needful, a good man shall not be without it. What is not bestowed upon us may not be so beautiful at that time wherein we desire it, for every thing is beautiful in its season. He that did not want God's kindness to renew him shall never want God's kindness to supply him: his hand shall not be wanting to give where his heart has been so large in working.—Charnock.

PEOPLE talk about special providence. I believe in the providences, but not in the specialty. I do not believe that God let the thread of my affairs go for six days, and on the seventh evening takes it up for a moment. The so-called special providences are no exception to the rule—they are common to all men at all moments. But it is a fact that God's care is more in some instances of it than in others, to the dim and often bewildered vision of humanity. Upon such instances men seize and call them providences. It is well that they can; but it would be gloriously better if they could believe that the whole matter is one grand providence.—George MacDonald.

"Hatred stirreth up strifes; but love covereth all sin."

Lines.

Bride of the Lamb, awake, awake!
Why sleep for sorrow now?
The hope of glory, Christ is thine,
A child of glory thou.

Thy spirit through the lonely night,
From earthly joy a part,
Hath sighed for one that's far away,
The Bridegroom of the heart.

But see, the night is wearing fast,
The breaking morn is near,
And Jesus comes with voice of love,
Thy drooping heart to cheer.

He comes—for oh! his yearning heart
No more can bear delay,
To scenes of full, unmingled joy,
To call his Bride away.

This earth, the scene of all his wo,
A stranger land to thee,
Full soon upon his heavenly throne
Its rightful King shall see.

Thou too shalt reign! He will not wear
His crown of joy alone;
And earth his royal Bride shall see,
Beside him on the throne.

Then weep no more, 'tis all thine own,
The crown, the joy divine;
And, sweeter far than all beside;
He—he himself is thine.

—From Geo. Muller's collection. Ed. by Annie Emery.

Arminius and his Sentiments.

James Arminius, D. D., was born in Oudewater, Holland, A. D. 1560. He was a man of untiring energy and marked ability. In early youth he subjected himself to a course of rigid mental discipline, which laid the foundation for a studious life. He was especially profound in classic and theological lore. Converted in early life, and yielding to his own convictions of duty, he was led to devote himself to the work of the holy ministry. He was licensed to preach in the beginning of 1588, and ordained in the August following; whereupon he was settled as pastor of the Dutch church in Amsterdam, which he served for fifteen years. It was during this period that he entered upon a course of investigation into the doctrines of Scripture and the teachings of the Fathers, which resulted in his adoption of the particular doctrine of Predestination bearing his name.

About the close of 1602, Francis Junius, Professor of Divinity in the University of Leyden, died. The attention of the Curators was immediately directed to Arminius, as the person most suitable to fill the vacancy. He accordingly received the degree of Doctor of Divinity, July 11, 1603, and entered at once upon the duties of Theological Professor. It was not his, however, to float upon an unruffled sea. The ministers about him were of the Calvinistic school, and many of them exceedingly high-toned. Even a mild and guarded expression of the "free grace" sentiments of Arminius, was sufficient to awaken suspicion, and kindle against him the fire of prejudice and passion. He found the students in theology mainly occupied with fine-spun theories and knotty questions of the schoolmen, while the vital principles of Christianity were almost wholly overlooked. He sought to correct this evil by directing their minds to the great fountains of truth—the ever-blessed Bible. But even this effort was misinterpreted. Dark eyed malignity watched eagerly for occasions to hurl her javelins of hate. Injurious reports were spread, and unwarrantable means adopted, to blacken his reputation and cripple his influence. He endured these assaults with great meekness, waiting long for a suitable opportunity to vindicate his views before the church and the world. That time came at last; and he lived long enough to see those dark waves of error and envy begin to recede, and the waters of salvation flow more clearly. But the pressure of study, anxiety, and persecution wore out his energies at length, and he hasted from the scene of sorrow and strife to repose in that land where "the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." He finished his course at the early age of forty-nine years. In life, his motto was, "Bona conscientia paradisus;"* and his death so illustrated the power of sustaining grace as to cause each spectator to exclaim: "O my soul, let me die the death of the righteous!"

We come to speak of the writings of Arminius. In so doing we refer to the American edition, consisting of three volumes, and making, in all, a work of 1772 pp. octavo. The author, as was common in his times, threw his writings into Latin. The 1st and 2d vols. were translated into English by James Nichols; the 3d by Rev. W. R. Bagnall, A. M. The translation is undoubtedly a good one. The work is sadly marred, however, by a multiplicity of typographical errors. The proof-reader seems to have been strangely remiss. Some of the mistakes are so significant as to negative the sense intended. We are disposed to hold that the American editor (Bagnall) partially responsible, at least, as he claims to have exercised a special supervision over the publication of the 3d volume, which has its full share of blunders.

Arminius was certainly a remarkable man. If we consider the influences under which he was reared—the prevailing sentiments of his times—the moral darkness which had hung like the pall of death over the dearest interests of the race for successive centuries, his greatness will appear still more obvious. We do not hold him up as a model of perfection. As a writer, he is too diffuse. He spins his thread too fine, by leading the reader into so many minute ramifications of the subject, that he is apt to lose sight of the main design, and become weary before he arrives at the journey's end. And yet he is logical and formal to a fault. He will give you syllogisms to your heart's content. His labored effort to enunciate a faultless system of theology was at the expense of that directness and force necessary to thrill and enlist the mightiest energies of the soul.

Let none suppose that Arminius gave rise to the doctrine of free agency. That doctrine derives its origin and authentication from the Book of God. It stands out in eternal vindication of God's punitive justice, and refers to the sinner himself the entire blame of his final overthrow. But the glorious old doctrine had been mutilated, rejected, and buried beneath the rubbish of heated controversies. It still had its sympathizers and advocates; but they were like squads of scattered soldiers who needed the rallying-cry of some efficient general, to consolidate the forces and lead them to victory. James Arminius did much to supply this lack, by collecting into a more complete system the teachings of the Bible and the Fathers on this subject. And yet, though he had risen out of the thick darkness, he still lingered in the region of haze. On some points he was clear as the light; on others, he was doubtful and tremulous. He made some concessions to Calvinism which the Arminians of this day are unwilling to accept. (To be continued.)

*A good conscience is a paradise.

Why am I an Adventist?

Not because I believe the Adventists are the most learned people living. Not because I believe they alone will be saved. Oh! no! this is not the reason. But there is a reason. And it is as follows: Because I believe Adventists are the only denomination who believe God's word—the Bible. Mark! I do not say, who profess to believe it. But I believe there is considerable difference in professing to be a good doctor and being a good one. So six hundred denominations may profess to believe the Bible, and yet when you come to test them they do not like to believe it quite all, or they wish to modify its statements. They would like to change it just a little, especially some parts of it.

Last winter a minister came into the village where I lived and delivered a discourse against Adventists. Said he—"I know it is declared 'The soul that sinneth, it shall die.'" (Ezk. 18:4.) "But," said he, "it does not mean that the soul shall die. Why, the soul is immortal! It can not die!"

Now if I had asked him if he believed the Bible, no doubt he would have been greatly surprised. Here we have an example of professing to believe God's word, but at the same time contradicting it squarely. But when he came to the following language, "Thou fool this night shall thy soul be required of thee," he believed all of that: nothing more or less. Why? Simply because in looking through his theological orthodox spectacles, (which magnify some texts, and set others clear out of sight and memory), he took it for granted the word immortal was intended to have been put in, but left out by mistake. (Probably an inspired error!) Let us look at the machine which grinds out such convicting (so-called) evidences of the soul's immortality, and see if it does agree with inspiration. To begin with, read Gen. 2:7—"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul." To save the trouble of borrowing a pair of theological spectacles, we will let it go through the wonderful machine, and here we have it. "And the Lord God formed man's body, [the house we live in] of the dust of the ground, and breathed into him a never-dying soul." Quite a machine for remoulding.—Again, Gen. 3:19: "In the sweat of thy face shall thou eat bread till thou returnest to the ground: for out of it wast thou taken. Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." But now the machine translation! "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thy body returns to the ground. 'Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return' was not spoken of the immortal soul."

Gen. 5:5—"And all the days that Adam lived were 930 years, and he died." (I believe it.) But remodeled it reads: "And all the days that Adam lived were 930 years; and he died not, but continues to live through the endless ages of eternity."

And so I might go from Genesis to Revelation and find no better agreement between God's word and the machine.

But give me the word right from the Author's hand. For I do not take any stock in the machine.

Sabbath, Dec. 8, in Wellington, Kan., I attended a funeral, and will give a specimen from the sermon we listened to. Of course it came from the orthodox machine. Service opened by reading from Job 14. But when he came to v. 10—"But man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost [this was the soul, he said], and where is he?" Said he, Job does not answer this question here, if he does elsewhere. But we find the answer, said he, by turning to Lk. 16:19 and onward. "There was a certain rich man," &c. This beautiful answer to Job's question, said he, never has nor ever can be gainsaid. And so he went on picturing to the congregation the awful truthfulness of the condition of the Rich Man, and the glories of the poor man.

But is it true that Job does not answer his question. Hear Job: "As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up, so man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake nor be raised up out of their sleep. Oh, that thou wouldst hide me in the grave!"

Give me the word of God, and let all the so-called orthodox explanations go to the wind. Give us men who are not afraid to deal out God's plain truths; who do not read the Bible through theological spectacles; or for the sake of popularity or greenbacks.

"Search the Scriptures."

There is only one reason why the religious world are not one people in faith and Christianity. If God had so designed it, it most assuredly would be so. He gave us the rule of action which should serve as a "light to our feet and a lamp to our path." If we were prompted by this one sentiment in all of the acts of life, harmony would pervade the various Christian churches throughout the universe.

Ambition, avarice, pride, and every feature of evil which could be transformed or garbed as Christian, have been duly installed in the various churches on the earth, not only on the earth, but in every church, in every town around us. Worldly men are by no means dull of perception, more than in other, earlier days. The more harmony between the church and the world, the less antagonism. And for the better success of it, the church have "cleared the deck" of the simplicity of the Christian faith and practice, and invited the lovers of pleasure to supply the vacancy. Pride of dress is a charm the world admires. The rich display of drapery and trappings in the church edifice is just what the world loves. The supreme splendor, external and internal, are just what suits the vain; of it the church too often feels proud. Cards are in use in many a Christian home, and this the world loves. Dance, music and mirth, are cherished in the church, and pleasure-seekers love it! Mock auctions, fishing ponds, and sham post-offices, are in the church, and this amuses and takes the funds of the unwary. The world likes this, and well they may, because it is the world outdone at their own sport.

It is not essential that a m[illegible]e converted to detect such de[illegible]eracy. Christianity commends its[illegible] to all men. The best theologians among men cannot deceive the people of God, he having provided some better light than the wisdom of men. To accord to the Infinite that which belongs to him, I should say, he has given the whole family of men, every race and tribe, an efficient rule of action. There is but one, and that is the Revelation of Jesus Christ. Set aside the disciplines, rituals, creeds and articles of faith, which are but the imagery of men, and take the Scriptures as a rule and guide to faith and practice, and the sequel would be, the churches, so multiform, would be a unit, like Christianity itself.

Would you be a man of God? read the Bible! Would you have the true light? read the Bible! Would you be the friend of the true church, and Christ the chief corner stone? search the Scriptures.

And brethren, you who have urged me to write these lines, let me say, God bless you all. Turn a deaf ear to every bigot. "Shake your hand from holding a bribe." Be not deceived by the hypocritical pretences of men. "Search the Scriptures," and Christ shall give thee light.

A Criticism Corrected.

The criticism was couched in these terms:

Do not again quote 'the wicked one' (1 John 5:18-19,) as the word of God; but observe that "one" is in italics; and the doctrine is "the wicked principle," &c.

The correction is found in the facts of the case, and the laws of language, which together, render the doctrine objected to unmistakably scriptural.

The phrase is written thus in Greek: "ho poneros," and "the wicked one" is its proper equivalent in our language. It is used FIVE times in 1 John. See ch. 2:13-14; 3:12; 5:18-19.

"One" is not in italics in any case as quoted and objected to. If it be so printed, it has been done ignorantly, but in the text referred to it is NOT so printed in any Bible at hand. Mark! I do not complain of criticism, but gladly embrace the opportunity to give the information needful to an understanding of the truth involved. Such is the statement of the case. The proof follows:

1. "Ho christos," the annointed one, occurs near forty times, and comes under the same law of language. And this phrase, to denote "the Messiah," answers exactly to the Hebrew, and must mean "the annointed one!" "Thine holy one" (Acts 2:27), is the same in its import. If in the same case it would read "ho horios son"—the holy one of thee. The Hebrew quoted (ch. 16:10), has the article and verbal adjective like the Greek, and our word "one" denoting individuality, is needful to give the sense, in our Bible, and in all Bibles, of whatever language, the annointed one, the holy one, the wicked one, are precisely alike as to the law of language. Other examples might be given to confirm this. The Greek and Hebrew has the sense of our word "one," but in English it should often be written out as it is in the text in question. "Frederick the wise" (ruler, or man, or "one,") concurs with the Bible language.

But every example forbids that the text should apply to a mere evil element. The article and the word for "wicked" are personal and masculine, and in the Greek lexicon the phrase is rendered, "The wicked ONE!"

2. The Apostle varies his terms and teaches the same doctrine, so as to confirm this: "Greater is HE that is in you, than HE that is in the world." (1 John 4;4.) As the first "he" refers to God or Christ, so the second must refer to some "one," and that "one" is "the wicked one." Amen. Truth is consistent and good sense.

3. The same article and partciple, "ho erkomenos" (Heb. 10:37) is: "He that shall come," or "the coming one." So "ho peiradzon" (Mat. 4:3) "the tempter," is the tempting one. Nay, more: the tempting one must have been as real or personal as the tempted one, so far as faith or the language is our guide.

We do not know what we have never learned, and this critic is no exception. Hence, though he be a man of good capacity, he should not assume to know what he has never had an opportunity to learn, until now. The Lord guide us into all truth, and then we shall not deny the existence of "the wicked one," nor be "ignorant of his devices."

J. B. COOK.

Is it True?

What true? Why, the idea that the LORD IS COMING SOON. Why not? Suppose some do ask—"Where is the promise of his coming?" and declare that "since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation:" are the lookers for that blessed hope to be intimidated by this? Certainly not. The word God gave to guide us told us to look for such things. It said they would come, and that they would come just before our Lord should make his second advent. "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come." Perilous times, hazardous, full of risk.

Portentous. Such are the times in which we live. Evils are abundant. Burglaries, robberies, murders, assassinations, all conspire to make the very conditions of our existence dangerous. Fires, storms, drouths, earthquakes, tidal waves, floods unite to make hazardous all our possessions. Property is not safe. Men of business ask: "Where shall we find a place of security in which we may deposit our treasures and be safe?" We answer: Only those treasures that are laid up in heaven are safe. All should lay up in store a good foundation against the time to come, for "the days are at hand and the effect of every vision." No safety out of Christ. Full of risk.—Property, reputation, life, all are risked by those who are actively engaged in business pursuits of any character. Active men see the force of these remarks.

These are "portentous" times. The times portend the speedy coming of the Just One. "Men are lovers of their own selves, covetous, proud, boasters, blasphemers," all tell in unmistakable tones, "the Bridegroom is at hand." The sun has been darkened, the moon has refused her light, stars have fallen, the word of God has been fulfilled, the kingdom of God is at hand.

Are we ready for that day? What are we doing? Are we sounding the alarm to a slumbering world? I believe it to be our duty to speak out plainly. If it is true that we are living in the last days, it is fearfully true. Responsibilities of a fearful character rest upon us. If we are God's chosen watchmen, we are to be very obedient. We are to speak as the oracles of God speak. Are we living up to our duty as heralds of the coming King? "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven!" 'Tis true! "When ye see all these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads for your redemption draweth nigh." All these things are past. The coming is near. IT IS TRUE.

Saints rejoice, and while you are glad, remember the slumberers. Poor souls out of Christ, let us seek to save them, and God will bless the effort.

J. R. PRESTON.

An Address,

TO THE CITIZENS OF GLOVERSVILLE, N. Y., DURING A LATE MEETING IN THAT PLACE.

Having been invited to visit your pleasant village, as a minister of Jesus Christ, by a few respectable citizens here, allow me to say that I come as an honest advocate of what I verily believe to be the truth of God's Word.

That I differ in some particulars from the denominations of your village is true; but by no means is this a strange thing or a criminal offense; for no two of your churches agree in all things, else the number of church edifices would be less.

That there are many persons in your village who are not favorably associated with any of your churches, is but a common condition of any village, and that I should be permitted to come to them as an ambassador of Christ, offering them salvation through his name, is by no means an act savoring of evil or immorality.

That I should look into the Bible through my own spectacles, is but the privilege accorded to all men in these days of religious liberty.

That my Baptist brethren should conclude from their standpoint of theological lore, that a man should be completely submerged in water to be properly baptized, is by no means an unendurable grievance to Pedo-baptists; neither is the election of my Presbyterian brethren considered unpardonable in the eyes of those who think the plan is to let whosoever will, come.

While I lift gently the curtain of the theological stage, and expose to the eye of the beholder the scenes of fancy only, which form the background of all the holy and sanctimonious drama that glitters in the sanctum sanctorum of modern churches, I would have it understood that I only act in the same capacity that a Luther, a Wesley, a Whitfield, and a Roger Williams, and many others have labored.

I remember distinctly the solitude of an ancient prophet who fled from the grasp of a wicked Jezebel, and cried in the bitterness of his soul for God to let him die. But God had something better than death for him. Heaven's livery was harnessed, and a chariot of fire thunders down the pathway of cloud, when Elijah is caught away bodily, that he need not taste death, and is rolled through the mighty depths of space to a quiet spot prepared of God.

Here I drop my trembling fear, and look up for aid, while I believe that God, who delivered Elijah, is bending over me, and is ready to lift me up when sufficiently tried.

Was Elijah any the less God's prophet for being thus straitened? The altars of Baal were smoking all around him, while God's altars were digged down and his prophets slain.

I remember my divine Master was called Beelzebub, by the only professed church of God then existing, and I look to him for succor, in my sorrows. Were might right, devils might laugh at their virtue and success. Were numbers, wealth, and honor a guarantee of right, the blighting systems of Popery and Mohammedanism should be placed in the manual of religious blessings and reckoned orthodox.

Would any Christian argue that the vast legions of Buddhists, who covered the greater part of Central and Eastern Asia and the Indian Islands, were the true worshippers of God because they constituted three-fourths of the population of the globe?

If numbers in adherents are to be reckoned as proof of correctness of faith, then Buddhism must have been of God.

Very unfortunately for the devotees of popular religion, the past furnishes an analogy against them. An open Bible with a clear head is about as reliable an avenue to truth as the nineteenth century furnishes. Musty creeds, smoked with the darkness of superstitious embers, snatched from the chimney corners of past ages, should not be suffered to supersede the decisions of men who have as clear heads and as ready access to the Bible as popes, or ecclesiastical councils, whose decisions were rendered under less favorable circumstances than those which we are blessed with.

I come with an open Bible and heart; and my position is open to criticism; and I should be most happy to risk my theology under the keen and searching test of a well-conducted debate with any one or more of the clergymen of Gloversville.

I believe in the true and living God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; and trust his grace to keep and save me for the sake of his Son who died for me. (John 6: 69.)

I believe Jesus Christ has come in the flesh; and such are of God. (1 John 4: 2.)

I believe Jesus Christ is the only name given under heaven among men whereby we can be saved. (Acts 4: 12.)

I believe God told the truth when he said man should surely die if he partook of the forbidden fruit. (Gen. 2:17.)

I believe the Serpent lied when he told the woman she should not surely die. (Gen. 3: 4.)

I believe the finally impenitent will be destroyed. (Ps. 145:20.)

I believe the saints of God will finally inherit the earth agreeably to the promise made to Abraham. I believe the righteous will inherit the land and dwell therein forever. (Ps. 37: 29.)

In short, I believe God's precious Word of truth, straight from the fountain-head. For this faith I suffer reproach as an evil-doer; and a simple notice of my meeting in the wigwam, Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, Oct. 20, was refused publicity in three of the pulpits of this village, the Congregational clergyman alone, extending the courtesy due to any decent man who comes with faith in the Bible.

WM. A. FENN.

IT is possible to be doing something and yet be very idle.

It "Hasteth Greatly."

"Even the voice of the day of the Lord." (Zeh. 1: 14.)

The day of the Lord "is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess." (Zeh. 1: 15.) But what is the voice of that day? I answer, it is the sign that foretells the event, and blessed are the people that recognize its voice, and take heed to it. When God was about to deliver his people from Egypt, his voice was heard in that land, but Pharaoh would not hear. He stood stiffly against his convictions of duty, passed on and was punished. But what was the voice of God to Pharaoh? It was the signs of those desolations that were to come on Egypt by special judgments. Moses was instructed to show to Pharaoh miraculous signs, and cause him to fear, so as to let the people go. God's voice was to be heard in those signs, as he declared to Moses (Ex. 4: 8)—"and it shall come to pass, if they will not believe thee, neither harken to the voice of the first sign, that they will believe the voice of the latter sign."

Now if the day of the Lord is to be ushered in "after the manner of Egypt," as saith the prophet, then in the signs that precede it will be heard the voice of God, or the voice of the day of the Lord. Hence, says Christ—"Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice [in these signs of my coming], and open the door [bid me welcome], I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." John says—"I am the voice of one crying"; and that other message through the midst of heaven, saying—"Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment has come," is the voice of God to this generation. Who understands it? The stork in the heavens knoweth her appointed times; and the turtle, the crane, and the swallow, know the time of their coming; but my people know not the judgment of the Lord.

Hosea says they are destroyed for lack of knowledge; and Christ says, because they know not the time of their visitation. The sword hung over their doomed city, but they saw not in it the voice of Jehovah. The city was surrounded by armies, but the voice of Jesus was forgotten. The voice that cried day and night for years—"Wo! wo! wo! to Jerusalem," brought forth but madness and revenge. Like Pharaoh, they hardened their hearts, they would none of his reproofs, and vengeance came upon them to the uttermost. Says the Savior—"O that thou hadst known, even now, in this thy day, the things that belong to thy peace; but now they are hid from thine eyes." "O that they were wise, that they understood these things, that they would consider their latter end." (Deut. 32: 29.) Many people would harken, if they knew it was the voice of the Lord: so would the Jews. They knew not the voice in the wilderness, and so rejected rather than helped prepare the way of the Lord.

"The Lord also thundered in the heavens, and the highest gave his voice; hailstones and coals of fire." (Ps. 18: 13.) How fearfully God has spoken to this generation with hail and fire. But he will soon speak more distinctly, and the nations, like Pharaoh, will be angry. Says David, "The heathen raged, the kingdoms were moved; he uttered his voice, the earth melted." (Ps. 46: 6.) In Ps. 93: 3, it is said, "The floods lift up their voice"; but who has heard the voice of God in the sea and waves roaring? Who has heard the voice of God in the preparations for "war"? Who has heard the voice of God in the rotting of the seed under the clod? Who has heard the voice of God in the darkening of the sun, and the falling of stars? Who has read of the "signs in the sun," called magnetic storms, that are so electrifying our atmosphere as to cause man, beast, and even vegetation, to fail before it; reaching out its fiery breath and threatening to burn the world with its inhabitants at once? and who believes that, in these dire calamities we have the voice of the day of the Lord?

"Behold, I stand at the door, and knock; if any man hear my voice." My brethren, do we hear understandingly? But what if we do not recognize his voice in these things, what then? Then the supper will be for others. Wesley says: "Its cities fall but lifts us up to meet him in the air." How terrible the burning of Portland, Chicago, and Boston; yet it is but the voice of that day that shall burn as an oven. My brethren, let us gird up the loins of our mind, and hope unto the end for the grace that shall be brought unto us at the revelation of Christ. Every moment is fraught with intense interest. Every hour should be employed in heralding the warning; and seeing we "look for such things," what manner of persons ought we to be "in all holy conversation and godliness?" If we spend our time in trying to save others, we shall have but little time to think of ourselves. We must be sanctified to enter upon his work. We shall be godly if we love to do his will; and blessed if we watch unto the end. For "blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments."

My brethren, the voice of God has called us to this waiting position, as he called John to cry from the wilderness; and if we "watch the way," we shall be giving meat in due season, and Jesus says, "Blessed is that servant." May the blessing be yours and mine.

New Phases of Crime.

We have on several occasions, called attention to the unusual prevalence of crime in the country, the daily perpetration of murders, assassinations, burglaries and brutal assaults, and the long catalogue of lesser villainies, and have commented upon the laxity of the administration of justice which permits crime to go unchecked. These subjects have, also, more or less occupied the attention of the entire press of the country, and have been discussed in almost every pulpit of the land. The theme has grown well nigh threadbare, and that, too, without accomplishing any apparent valuable or practical result in the suppression of crime or the enforcement of punishment. To call attention again, therefore, to the increase of crime or the impunity with which it is committed, would be only a repetition of what has already grown stale, but there are some new features connected with it, which have recently been developed, which deserve consideration. Hitherto it has almost invariably been the rule that murders have been committed either in revenge for some real or fancied wrong, or for the sake of obtaining valuables belonging to the victim, and they have been committed in a simple, direct way. Now, however, it is well nigh impossible to take up a paper without finding accounts of murders growing out of the most singular and diverse causes, and perpetrated in a manner combining at once the most fantastic and hideous ideas with the refined essence of cruelty and diabolism. A notable instance of this is the murder perpetrated at Dover, Del., a few days since. A Professor of chemistry, who had a negro servant in his employ, suddenly disappeared, leaving his laboratory in a state of complete wreck, with the corpse of the negro frightfully mutilated among the ruins. The hands, feet and head of the negro were missing, and the skin gone from the body. At first it was supposed to be the body of the Professor, who had been blown up with his own chemicals, especially as he had given out that he had discovered a gas, one property of which was its power to remove the skin from the body, so as to prevent all possible identification. It turned out, however, that the Professor and the negro had an altercation, during which the Professor killed him. He then cut off the negro's head, hands and feet, and buried them. The idea then seized him that he might turn the negro to advantage by making it appear that he had been killed by an explosion of this gas, and, having been mutilated beyond identification, the body might be taken for his own, and his supposed widow might collect his life insurance. He thereupon flayed the negro, and, placing gunpowder in the floor underneath him, blew him and the laboratory up together. The affair eventuated as he had planned it. The body was supposed to be that of the Professor, and it was the universal opinion that he had been blown up by his newly-discovered gas. The opinion might have remained unchanged forever had not the Professor returned the other day and delivered himself up to the authorities. The records of crime in this country do not reveal anything more grotesquely horrible and diabolical. Its parallel is not found even in the Jumpertz murder, in which, as will be remembered, a German woman was cut up and sent from Chicago to New York; the Webster-Parkman murder at Boston; the recent Charles River murder; or the Alice Bowlsby case. The most horrible phantasies of Poe himself do not excel it in the elements of cruelty. In Cincinnati, a few days since, two butchers entered the slaughter-pen, and, having stripped for their work, one of them turned suddenly upon the other and plunged his butcher-knife into his breast, severing his heart in twain. On Wednesday last, a stranger walked into a fashionable bagnio in New York city, and, deliberately shooting a courtezan dead, coolly walked out, informing her terrified companions that he could be found at the police station. A physician of Brooklyn is now on trial for poisoning an Internal Revenue Assessor of the same city, that he might continue a criminal intimacy with the wife of the latter, and the guilty woman and her paramour attended him on his death bed. Now and then, crime is invested with a mysterious sort of romance, hardly ever to be found outside the pages of fiction. The Independence Belge contains a narrative of a murder of this kind which recently occurred at Brussels. Thirty years ago, a Captain of Dragoons seduced a young girl and then deserted her. A few weeks ago, he became involved in a quarrel with a fellow-officer, challenged him, and killed him at the first fire. The victim was his illegitimate son, and the mother the young girl whom he had seduced, although he did not know him. The mother called upon him one day, and, after upbraiding him for the murder, turned upon him and killed him and then killed herself. Columns might be filled with these extraordinary crimes which have occurred of late.

It seems human life was never considered of so little value as now. The slightest pretext is made the occasion of murder. Even young children, when denied the gratification of some passing fancy or whim, have taken revenge for the denial by murder or suicide. The impunity with which crime has been committed where there was some show of palliation, has gradually emboldened every man of brutal instincts to give way to his passion upon the slightest provocation, when, under other circumstances, the fear of punishment would have led him to control his passion within bounds. With the law's delay, the incapacity of prosecuting attorneys, which leaves open loop-holes for escape, and the conflicting testimony of scientific men as to what constitutes emotional insanity, which is now the favorite plea of murderers, and how far a murderer is responsible for his crime in this condition, and the mistaken clemency of the pardoning power, the chances are in favor of escape or light punishment. There is one thing certain: Crime will not cease until the laws are enforced. When a man knows that he must pay the forfeit for taking another man's life with his own, the alarming increase of murder will stop. Until that time, we must expect that murder will continue, and that it will continue to develop new and strange features of cruelty.—Chicago Tribune, Dec. 14.

Unworthy Of Reckoning.

Let all who read the following, consider with candor whether they are so living as to render the passing years worthy of being reckoned as a part of life: "Father," said a Persian monarch to an old man who, according to Oriental usage, bowed before the sovereign's throne, "pray be seated; I cannot receive homage from one bent with years; whose head is white with the frost of age. And now, father," said the monarch, when the old man had taken the proffered seat, "tell me thine age; how many of the sun's revolutions hast thou counted?" "Sire," answered the old man, "I am but four years old. "What," interrupted the king, "hast thou understood my question? Fearest thou not to answer me falsely, or dost thou jest on the very brink of the tomb?" "I speak not falsely, sire," replied old man, "neither would I offer a jest on a subject so solemn. Eighty long years have I wasted in folly and sinful pleasures and in amassing wealth, none of which I can take with me when I leave this world. Four years only have I spent in doing good to my fellow-men; and shall I count those years that have been utterly wasted? Are they not worse than a blank? And is not that portion only worthy to be reckoned as a part of my life which has answered life's best end?"—Christian Messenger.

Advent Christian Times.

CHICAGO, TUESDAY, December 24, 1872.

HISTORY OF THE ILLINOIS CONFERENCE.—Under the head of Book Notices will be found a proposition from Br. Marston for the publication of an history of Adventism in Illinois for the past twenty years. The topic is a live one, and the author well fitted for his task. Let the work be pressed. To this end let all who can aid by compliance with Br. Marston's suggestions, do so at once.

SOME ONE has inquired, how can a Christian man or woman, anxious to do good, accomplish more in a given time than by introducing a good religious newspaper into the family he wants to benefit? By so doing he sends them a dozen or more tracts every week, as long as they continue to take the paper. You can hardly bestow a more practical benefit. Try it!

THE Chicago Pulpit says:

Dr. Isaac I. Hayes in his interesting lecture last Thursday night in the Star Course told of the trouble experienced by some missionaries in the Arctic regions, who adopted the method of converting the hyperborean natives, by frightening them with vivid descriptions of hell. The missionaries were astonished by the natives clapping their hands, and expressing a lively desire to go there.

A LATE issue of the San Francisco Post says:

Dr. Fassett preached on the nature and destiny of man, last night. He gave an account of the principal heathen religions, and declaring the immortality of the "soul" of man, as a separate entity, or as a part of God to be reabsorbed in the universal soul. He said this was the heathen and orthodox idea of man. Scripture, he claimed, said otherwise. Men of science, without the Bible, are rapidly coming to the belief that death is the end of man. Consulting humanity alone, this is the rational belief, but the Bible reveals that when man dies, there is no more consciousness for him until the resurrection; that at a given day, now near at hand, the just and the unjust shall be raised and judged; the virtuous having immortality conferred upon them, the wicked being resolved back to dust from whence all sprung. Except God clothe the resurrected man with incorruption and immortality, he shall die to live no more, while the good will possess the earth forever and ever. So says Dr. Fassett, and such, he insists, is the plain teaching of the Bible.

HADES AND HEAVEN.

[First Article.]

Two widely different theories concerning the present state of the dead are entertained among those Protestants who believe in the immortality of the soul. The most popular of these can scarcely be called a theory of the intermediate state, since it recognizes no middle condition, but at once assigns the newly disembodied soul to the highest heaven or the lowest hell. This will appear from the statements of some of its most distinguished advocates. Dr. Adam Clarke, commenting on 2 Cor. 5:6, says:

"The apostle gives no intimation of an intermediate state between being at home in the body and being present with the Lord"

Thomas Scott says:

"If our sins be forgiven and our hearts renewed into holiness, heaven will be the rest of our souls, while our bodies will be secretly hid in the grave." (Observations on Job 14.)

Albert Barnes says:

"The Christian when he leaves the body is at once with the Lord Jesus." (Remarks on 2 Cor. 5.) "Our pious friends that have died are now happy. They are with God. A father, or mother, or friend, that may have left us, is there—there in perfect felicity."—(Note on Mat. 22:32.)

Prof. Bartlett says:

"It is taught in the New Testament that not only the soul of the Christian might, but that it would, enter and enjoy the presence of Christ at death; and that the continuance of its life here in the body actually delays its enjoyment of Christ's immediate presence in glory." "It is affirmed that the believer, upon the death of the body, actually does enter heavenly blessedness at once." (Life and Death Eternal, pp. 196, 199.)

A well known author, but recently deceased, says:

"The sainted dead are already before the throne, and serve God day and night in his temple." (H. Mattison, Bible Doc. of Im. p. 35.)

Benson has this note on Eccl. 12:7:

"The soul of man, so called because of its spiritual or immaterial nature, shall return unto God, into his presence, and before his tribunal, THAT it may there be SENTENCED TO ITS EVERLASTING HABITATION, either to abide with God forever if approved by him, or otherwise to be ETERNALLY SHUT OUT OF HIS PRESENCE AND FAVOR."

The state of the impenitent dead is thus described by President Edwards:

"As soon as ever the soul parts from the body, from that moment the case will be absolutely determined; there will then be an end forever to all hope, to everything that men hang upon this life; the soul then shall know certainly that it is to be miserable to all eternity without any remedy. It shall see that God is its enemy; it shall see its Judge clothed in his wrath and vengeance. Then its misery will begin, it will that moment be swallowed up in despair; the great gulf will be fixed between it and happiness, the door of mercy will be forever shut up, the irrevocable sentence will be passed." "We may well suppose that when a wicked man dies, his soul is seized by wicked angels; and that they are around his bed ready to seize the miserable soul as soon as it is parted from the body. And with what fierceness and fury do those cruel spirits fly upon their prey; and the soul shall be left in their hands! There shall be no good angels to guard and defend it. God will take no care of it; there is nothing to help it against those cruel spirits that shall lay hold of it, carry it to hell, there to torment it forever."—(Works, vol. II., pp. 880-883.)

These extracts suffice to show that the theory under consideration renders the 'resurrection of the body' unnecessary, and the resurrection of the dead impossible; whilst it entirely ignores both the necessity and the fact of a judgment-day for the assembled world. The detention theory in a measure avoids both of these errors, by making the present state of the dead properly an intermediate state, both as respects the happiness of the righteous and the misery of the wicked. Its advocates uniformly represent the necessity of a resurrection of the body, and of a day of judgment. It may be stated thus: All souls when separated from the body at death go to hades. This 'spirit-world' is divided by an impassable gulf into two divisions called paradise and tartarus. All good souls go to paradise; all wicked souls go to tartarus. In these respective places they remain until the reunion of the soul and the body at the general resurrection, when the former will rise to higher joys in heaven, and the latter will sink to deeper misery in gehenna. Dr. Fitch, in his work on The Intermediate State, sums up the doctrine in these words:

"Now, of the things that I have spoken, this is the sum: At death the body returns to the dust, as it was; the soul goes to the world of spirits, called by the general name of hades; the good to that happy part of it called paradise, where they are blessed; the bad are cast into outer darkness, where they are in torments."

The theory which assigns all souls immediately after death to their final destination in heaven or hell may not inaptly be termed radical; whilst that which allows of a detention in hades may as justly be termed conservative. Both of these theories claim the support of Scripture; both acknowledge the immateriality and immortality of the soul; both make heaven the final abode of the righteous; and both consign the wicked to endless misery in hell. Holding these points in common, neither party questions the 'orthodoxy' of the other.

It is interesting to observe with what ease each theory is in turn demolished by the advocates of the other. Mr. John Wesley was an able advocate of the conservative view. In his sermon on "Dives and Lazarus," he says:

"It is, indeed, very generally supposed, that the souls of good men, as soon as they are discharged from the body, go directly to heaven; but this opinion has not the least foundation in the oracles of God. On the contrary, our Lord says to Mary, after the resurrection, 'Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father' in heaven. But he had been in paradise, according to his promise to the penitent thief: 'This day shalt thou be with me in paradise.' Hence, it is plain that paradise is not heaven. It is, indeed (if we may be allowed the expression), the ante-chamber of heaven, where the souls of the righteous remain till, after the general judgment, they are received into glory." (Sermons, vol. II., pp. 416-417.)

Admitting as the radicals do that Jesus and the penitent thief were together in paradise on the day of the crucifixion; and admitting as they do that all righteous souls go at death to this same paradise, the argument urged by Mr. Wesley against their theory is unanswerable and irresistible.

A recent writer in advocating the conservative theory, after quoting Acts 2:34, says:

"David, the man after God's own heart, hath not yet ascended into heaven. We should, then, conclude that none others had. This, Christ says, is true. John 3:13: 'No man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man.' The dead, then, are not yet in heaven.......If David hath not ascended to heaven—if Christ had been in paradise, but had not been in heaven (when Mary met him at the sepulcher), then paradise is not heaven. The penitent thief went to paradise, but not to heaven. The place to which the souls of the righteous go at death is not heaven." (C. W. Fitch. The Intermediate State, pp. 20, 21.)

The argument as against the radical theory is a good one. Arguing from the admitted premises of both parties, the conclusion reached cannot be logically avoided. But in any event the possible triumph of the conservatives is but a partial one. They have indeed succeeded in overthrowing the radical theory, without making any advance towards sustaining their own. They must first establish their premises before we grant their conclusion.

On the other hand, the radical, in replying to the conservative's argument, demolishes the latter's theory without strengthening his own. He cites Luke 23:43 as proof that the righteous go to heaven when they die. "The passage does not prove this," replies the conservative. "It proves rather that the righteous go at death to be with Christ in paradise. He said to the thief, 'Thou shalt be with me in paradise,' not in heaven." "Where is paradise?" asks the radical. "In hades," is the reply. "Those who mistake paradise for heaven, and hades for hell, may be perplexed to reconcile the two expressions of our Lord, 'To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise,' and, 'Thou wilt not leave my soul in hades.' There is no contradiction. He was in that part of hades which is called paradise. America is the general name of all this Western Continent, but United States is the happy part of America. So hades is the name of all the spirit world, but paradise is the blessed part of that spirit world." (Ib. pp. 27, 28.)

To this the radical replies: "This does not meet my objection to your theory. This question of hades, and its alleged divisions, is entirely foreign to the subject, and must be separately discussed. My argument may be stated thus:

"All the righteous when they die go to be with Christ;

"But Christ is in heaven;

"Therefore the righteous when they die go to heaven.

"You admit the major premises, and I am prepared to sustain the minor term by express assertion of Scripture. 'Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us.' (Heb. 9:24.) 'Our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ.' (Phil. 3:20.) Stephen 'looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God.' (Acts 7:55.) 'The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout.' (1 Thes. 4:16.) 'Your Master also is in heaven.' (Eph. 6:9; Col. 4:1.) 'Jesus Christ is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God.' (1 Pet. 3:22.)

"These passages are decisive of the points in question; and the first two propositions being thus established, the conclusion evidently follows, that the righteous when they die go to heaven."

The conservative cannot meet this argument, unless he can show that Christ is personally in hades, or there in the same sense that he is in heaven. This he cannot do; and his theory, therefore, fails.

Nor need the radicals confine their objections to a single passage. There are many other texts, quoted and relied upon alike by both parties, that—reasoning from the major premises as above—make directly against the detention of souls in hades. For instance: Eccl. 12:7 is said to mean that at death the soul goes to God who gave it. But God is in heaven, whilst the conservatives say that the soul does not go at first to heaven but to hades. Again, Phil. 1:21-3 is said to prove that all the righteous go at death to be with Christ. But Christ is in heaven, whilst the paradise of the conservative is not in heaven, but in hades.—To be continued.

The Coming Judgment—Signs of the Times.

The Rev. Dr. Patterson preached at the Jefferson Park Presbyterian church on yesterday. The reverend gentleman chose for his text, Daniel 12: 1:

> "And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of the people; and there shall be time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time; and at that time the people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book."

Before proceeding to refer to the text, it would be well to refer to the use and design of prophecy. The country in which they lived was one of the foremost in the discovery of truth. It was here that the first effort was made to collect data as to the weather, the attempt was made to successfully enlist the aid of observers in all parts of the world. The result of these searchings were sent to Washington, where a bureau was established for the study of the facts, so that they could discover the laws working under these facts. There was nothing in the world that did not work under the influence of laws. So much had been learned that when a storm passed eastward from the Rocky mountains they could tell when it would strike Chicago, and many hundreds of vessels thereby had been prevented from going out to certain wreck, and hundreds of valuable lives had been saved. The storm signal was a serious, solemn thing, on which the lives of many men depended.

They had also a storm signal of prophecy, which extended its observations not only for a few days in advance, but for centuries. History had corresponded with the visions of Daniel, in his vision of the four great empires. The church of God was presented to view in the prophecies; her apostacy, her ultimate triumph. These reports were presented to the officers of God's bureau, and they were expected to draw the lessons for to-day therefrom. Such officers as did not do this had been reprimanded by Christ as hypocrites who were able to tell the heavens but could not discover signs of the times. There were of course different degrees of ability in the power of drawing the conclusions involved in this book of prophecy. It was the duty of all that the lesson of preparation for the future with those of the past, they would be able to prepare themselves for what awaited them.

They would observe how different were the popular ideas of the end of the world and those of the Bible. Many of those who professed Christianity spoke of the coming of the millennium, but upon reading the word of God, a very different view was presented. Thus they read of a "final trouble," in the text, and the Lord Jesus Christ said that the time preceeding his coming should be a time of trouble; and in the last revelation of of God, in the apocalypse, the same idea of the trouble at the end of the world was evolved. He would not endeavor to reconcile these two views; they were as different as Satan's deceit and God's truth.

The question then arose what date was to be fixed for the hour of this great trouble? Persons had attempted to fix the day and the hour for the coming of Christ, in spite of the statement of the gospel that no one could foretell it. But they could point out some of the things which would be forewarnings of the approach of Christ. They would of course be but approximate statements, but still they would be of use. The prophet Daniel had given them some marks by which they should know the time of the approach of Christ. One of these marks was, that there should be much running to and fro. They could see that this sign was visible throughout all the land.

That knowledge was to increase was another sign. Daniel seemed to make some connection between the two signs. The increase of knowledge to-day, was the subject of remark by all. From the time of Solomon what advances in knowledge has been made. There was not a child who had passed into the high school that did not know more than Daniel and all the wise men of the east, about the conformations of the world. There might be lost arts and sciences, it was no less true that the diffusion of knowledge was far greater than it was in Daniel's day. All the people of Europe were engaged in introducing national education, and the tide was still at its flood.

Then there was to be a great revival in religious feeling. The revival was referred to in the text, and in the apocalypse the spirits mislead many.

It was also stated that there should be a great missionary work going on in the earth. In the midst of all the calamities which were to take place, this work of preaching repentance was to go on. Christ preached not the universal redemption of the race, whatever its sins; but an everlasting death and destruction for those who repent not. In these days the work of the missionary laborer would be forwarded. The apocalypse also referred to it; and to-day they knew that the time of missionary labor was at hand, and even now with them.

The increase of sin and wickedness was also another sign of the last days. The Apostle Paul bore out in one of his epistles, the idea conveyed in the text, and men were said to be lovers of pleasure more than the lovers of God. The number of those engaged in the pursuit of vice was to be greater than those serving the Lord. Jesus had himself said that the world would persecute the saints; the crisis of the world would come when it appeared as if the wicked ones of the earth were about to swallow up God's earth. Other signs might be referred to, but he would not mention them to-day.

This time was one of growth; it was not merely a day or two, but a continuance of time. There were, however, some chronological points which were mentioned in the chapter, giving some information as to the time of the coming of great trouble. Thus the last of the four great kingdoms was clearly that of the Romans. There were references in the prophecy to the Papal empire, the little horn that grew out of the beast, and that was to flourish for a time. The duration of time for which the church of Rome should exist was treated of in the chapter. On one calculation, the year 1793 was the year when its overthrow should commence, and it was remarkable that the first movement of the French nation towards liberty was then made. But the prophetic year contained only 360 days, instead of the Julian year of 365 days. This would bring the 1,260 years, spoken of in the prophecy, down to 1775, when it was remarkable that the first blood was shed in the war for the foundation of the American nation. Nor was it a war of peoples, it was a war of principles. The principles of the ten European nations proceeding from the Roman empire was that the office of king was hereditary, whereas the principles of the sons of America was entirely opposite. Such a war was of sufficient importance for it to be referred to in the holy book.

Now there was another decree referred to in the text. The calculations in reference to the Papacy were made from the year 606, which would bring the commencement of the new era in 1848, calculating on the prophetic time of 360 days for the 1,260 years spoken of in the prophecy. In that year, the French revolution occurred, starting the great war on the Papal system.—Even writers on newspapers acknowledged, if not the hand of God, at least the extraordinary niceness with which the events of to-day were depicted in the prophecies of the Bible. There appeared to be predicted 75 years of judgment to follow the French revolution of 1848.

The results he had presented to them had been agreed to by those who entirely differed in other respects. The minds of God's people had been directed to the events of 1848 and 1866, and the facts of history bore out their anticipations. They were now in an era of troubles. What these troubles were to be were set forth in one way and another. The period was to be one of bloody wars. They had already an immense increase in the size of armies, a wonderful improvement in engines of destruction. Over 5,000,000 men were now under arms, and the prophets had strained themselves to think of language sufficiently terrible to portray the horrors of the coming time. The symbols signified a greater slaughter than the world had ever seen before. The 38th chapter of Ezekiel gave some particulars of this trouble.

The time was also to be one of great anarchy, such as they had seen in their great calamity. The infidels of the old world had taken part in it, and the work proceeded with that power which would always follow the efforts of a united organization.

There were to prevail singular superstitions and strange delusions, to be sent of God. Then God interfered in these times; there were to be earthquakes and violences of earth and water, famines, storms, hurricanes, etc. There was to be a period of pestilence to come upon them. The vials of wrath poured out by the angels represented the same idea; fire-water, wormwood, or absinthe were already used.

Earthquakes had increased since the 17th century. Until since that time they numbered more than all that had ever before occurred. No day had passed since that time on which some part of the earth had not felt the effects of the visit of this most terrible agent of destruction. A man could fly from the storm, from the tempest, but from the earthquake they could not flee.

Then there was some reference to the last grand destruction of the world; the sun, moon were to be dark, the stars were to fall and amid the horrors of a wicked world, the son of God would appear in judgment. This was the picture presented by the Bible, and its realization was not to be deferred for many centuries. They could not tell the date when it should happen, but the march of the earth towards it was resistless. No attempt of the statesman or of the politician could prevent the wars or the earthquakes which were to come; no one could forsee the coming earthquake or the final realization of the day of judgment.

Seeing, then, that the prophecies had been fulfilled in the past, it was certain they would be fulfilled in the future. Let them not be weary nor careless; let them awake to the times in which they live; let them light their lamps and be prepared to receive the Lord on his coming. Was it wise, then, for them to put their hearts, as well as their money, into real estate, or to drown their souls in sleep with the votaries of pleasure? Let them endeavor to put their confidence in God, learn to love his works so well, that instead of regretting the destruction of the earth they would rather be ready to welcome his coming, no matter what might be the course he should take in carrying out his purposes.

Then, with these things, what manner of men should they be to let them look for that new kingdom, spoken of in the holy w[illegible] in which dwelt the Lord and Sa[illegible], and all manner of righteousness.—Chi. Times, Dec. 16.

Wind and Wave in Denmark.

For two centuries no such terrible storm and inundation have been known along the Baltic as those the lamentable effects of which we are now witnessing, and even during the tumult of the elements in January, 1871, the damage to property and destruction of life were not at all comparable with these. The hurricane began to blow over the Baltic on Wednesday, the 13th of November, and by noon of that day had reached its culminating point; then it veered from the northeast through east to southeast, and on the next day the barometer generally indicated only such atmosphere pressure as it had shown before the setting in of the gale. On Thursday, news of the disaster began to come to the city, and instantly measures were taken to relieve the sufferers. We had experienced some effects of a gale already, the wind had blown in fitful gusts through the streets, sending the tiles flying through the air, rattleing the shutters, and making it tolerably dangerous to be abroad, but we had not dreamed that in other places it had driven the sea over farms and farm-houses and done such dread work, the recital of which seems an incredible tale. Huge trees on the town walls and in the parks had been broken and torn up by the roots and sent flying through the air almost like chips and straw, but in other places the very land itself had been destroyed, and in some, as in Hummingen, it had been made to contribute to the sea in such a way and so extensively that it is improbable that it will ever again appear above the surface. This Hummingen was a low-lying peninsula jutting out between the sea and the inner fiord. It was covered with numerous houses and farm lands, and during the terrible gale every inhabitant was drowned and every farm destroyed. The newspapers are filled with the most harrowing accounts of the distressing adventures of the people on that wild day. They describe the first appearance of the waves as looking like that of a "white thing,' seen far off above the crests of the sea; it came onward with dreadful swiftness, foaming, hissing, tumbling, and roaring, and then the terrified people saw that it was a series of waves, the first of which was three or four feet high, which came onward to the shore, behind it still others more towering than itself. The people essayed to fly, and almost instantly were lifted from their feet and swept inward with the waves which rushed over the meadows and fertile fields, converting them into barren sea. The waters in many places penetrated for miles inland,and meeting from opposite sides formed islands where previously the lands were contiguous. The islands were covered with gravel and sand, and it will be long before they will again be fit for cultivation. In the Belts there were many little islands which were swept over by the water and all their inhabitants were drowned. Upon the flat islands of Lolland and Foster the water mounted as high as seven feet above its usual level, leaped down dykes and embankments, which offorded scarcely any, and that but momentary, protection, and carried everything before it. The prodigious wind smote fell upon hundreds of sailing and steam vessels, and sent them driving headlong, turned many of them keel upwards, and made them utter wrecks along the coasts of Faxe and Praesto Bays. It has been estimated that from Elsinore to Lebeck, a distance of 150 miles, the average difference in the level was not less than 12 feet, and perhaps more. On the coast of Funen stood a house in which lived an old man and his wife. The incoming water sliced a piece out of the land and took the house with it, drowning the old man and bearing the woman inland, yet leaving her alive at last. The captain of the brig Mercuse, from Copenhagen, was washed overboard from his ship by the wave and immediately replaced bruised, but alive, upon his deck by another wave coming from an opposite direction. At Saxtjed, where the water rose nine or ten feet, eleven human beings were watched for hours driven about in the waves on the roof of a house. Attempts were made to rescue them, and one at last was successful, but not before one of the people had been washed from the roof and drowned. But the imagination may furnish pictures of its own; it can hardly form any that shall be more terrible than the realities. Efforts for the relief of the sufferers are making throughout Europe, and so far as is possible these poor people will be recompensed for their losses.—Copenhagen letter, Nov. 26.

The Undercurrent of Crime.

The way of transgressors is very hard. A morning paper gives the particulars of a murder committed yesterday, which conveys a terrible lesson. A handsome, genteel, modest girl, had been seduced in Philadelphia, and turned out upon the world. She came to New York and found employment as a waiter in the brothel concert saloons—always, however, manifesting a dislike for drink and profane language. She was introduced to one of the worst of these saloons, and to companions of the vilest character, by a companion in sin, but with that heaven planted instinct, which is never wholly eradicated, attached herself to one man who is described as a thief, a pimp, a rowdy, a drunkard, and a blackguard in general. This man became jealous of her, and after twenty five drinks came to her room and shot her through the lungs. She is expected to die; and he, if useful in elections, will undoubtedly be allowed soon to go free by the Judges who are elected by pimps and thieves. The Herald, in reporting this case, gives the following descriptions of men and houses licensed and protected by our city government and police:

> "Julia Smith, aged 19, became acquainted with Rosy Wilson, aged 22, who acted as waiter in the vile den of a concert saloon kept by Martin Stincke, in the basement 152 Chatham street, a few doors north of Baxter street. Stincke and his den need but a brief description. He is an enormous German, with a brutal face and eyes half closed with gluttony. The animate and inanimate paraphernalia of his saloon are six wretched looking waiter girls, the bar-tender a wan looking fiddler, a piano player, a piano, four portraits of half naked women, a dozen chairs, a half dozen tables, some kegs of beer, some bottles of creosote and Jersey lightning and a couple of dozen drinking glasses. To this detestable spot Rosy Wilson induced the girl Smith to come three weeks ago. Julia Smith was pretty and her good looks and reserved ways would bring custom to the saloon and pennies to the till of the gluttonous German, who weighs over three hundred and fifty pounds

The companion of the murderer Harrington, named "Forney," confessed, in the presence of Captain Kennedy, that they had each taken about twenty-five drinks apiece of hot whiskey, 'Tom and Jerry,' and lager beer. Some of their drinks were taken in the saloon of Stincke, in Chatham street, but the principal drinking was done in the rum shop of 'Boss Thompson,' corner of Baxter street and Chatham. This is "an all-night house."

How long will these detestable resorts of the vicious and criminal be licensed to pollute and endanger society. —N. Y. Daily Witness.

We repeat, that what we want is conscience everywhere. Intellectually, this is an age and a nation of splendor. Great minds are not few nor far between, while the intellect of the masses has a vigor unparalleled. Investigation is threading every labyrinth of science, and pushing back the boundaries of the unknown. Speculation is full of daring, and invention is full of success. Commercial enterprise is building railroads across the continent, and girding the globe with telegraphs. Intellectually, this age and nation are without parallel. But all this, without a corresponding development, of moral character, only gives greater complexity to intrigue, and furnishes greater helps to infamy. We must have conscience.—Western Advocate.

It is remarkable what force inheres in the very form of an axiom. Put a sentiment in the proverbial mold, and it will be commonly assumed to be a sage saying. Take, for example, this from Pope's "Essay on Man":

And, spite of pride, in erring reason's spite,
One truth is clear: whatever is, is right.

Think how long this has been quoted by skeptics, and by believers too; atheists, theists, and deists, alike; yet how triumphantly did Charles Dickens unveil its absurdity and folly when he wrote:

"The aphorism, 'Whatever is, is right,' would be as final as it is lazy, did it not include the troublesome, consequence, that nothing that ever was, was wrong."

AT HOME.

. . . . Jay Gould has delivered over to the Erie Railway officers about nine millions of dollars in stocks, bonds and real estate which he had appropriated (that is the polite for stolen) from that corporation. He has a number of millions left.

. . . . As we draw to the end of the year the crimes, casualties and horrors of which it has been so prolific, seem to multiply in number and grow in magnitude. Scarcely can a weekly journal do more than barely record their occurrence.—Interior.

. . . . The New York World states that justifiable homicide is now held to include "the case of every man who kills any other man on account of any woman, and of every woman who kills any man on any account whatever."

. . . . There are thirty-nine life-time convicts in the Illinois State Penitentiary, thirty-seven of whom are murderers. The number of murderers outside of the Penitentiary is so large that we shrink from an attempt to count them.—Chi. Journal.

. . . . Seasonable hints: look carefully to your stoves, furnaces, pipes, chimneys, ash-bins, and everything in every place where fire is used, or is in proximity. A little care in this respect may save your house from destruction. A large majority of the fires in dwelling houses are caused by defective flues, or some little thing that a few minutes' attention would have remedied.

. . . . A bill is pending before the legislature of Indiana providing that, whenever an accused person is acquitted upon the plea of temporary insanity, the Court shall commit him to a lunatic asylum for the same number of years that he would have been confined in the State's prison had he been convicted. In case of murder, this would be for life. This will, if it becomes the law, put an end to that kind of insanity which lasts only just long enough to commit murder.

. . . . The eastern and more difficult section of the Hoosac tunnel has been completed, and the western section is nearly done. Year after year the work has dragged. By 1874 it will be ready for use, or nearly so.—The West will then have a direct route to Boston, much to the advantage of that city and of the entire Western country, for which New York now furnishes such superior sea board advantages as to almost amount to a complete monopoly of through business.

. . . . The American Board for Foreign Missions reports the first quarterly balance of the new year, which, instead of the increased income asked for, shows only $55,362 of receipts, against $67,757 in the corresponding months last year, and $82,390 in the first quarter of the year before. We occasionally see slurs about Adventists not showing their faith in their works. The above figures would seem to indicate that orthodoxy consid ers the realization of its hope as either a quite improbable or else a not very desirable event. It is a shame to them to claim that the church and the world are growing better, and then publish such facts as these figures afford.

. . . . Says the New York Tribune: There seems to be no end to the variety of reasons which induce men and women in irregular relations to shoot each other. The Neilson-place murder was because the unhappy woman would not leave the house. A thief, named Harrington, yesterday morning shot a woman because she would. It is singular to observe how much finer feelings these scamps have than decent people. The ordinary run of mortals differ every day and think nothing of it. But the Fairs, the Macarthys, of one sex, and the Fosters and Harringtons of the other, are so delicately constituted that the slightest word agitates them to the shooting point. And the average juror and judge are moved to tears over it.

. . . . Ship-owners may well say that their troubles come in battalions. We question if any such destruction of marine property as that of the year now closing has ever before been known, except in time of war. The gales which ravaged the coasts of the Baltic and North Sea, early in November, caused great devastation to shipping. Next came severe storms on the Atlantic, in which many lives were lost and much commerce was wrecked along the coast of North America. Now we have news of hurricanes in the north of England, Wales and Scotland, in which life and property were destroyed. Add to these disasters the isolated ones, like the burning of the Missouri, Bienville and America, the wrecks of the Sacramento, Metis and other ships on the Pacific and the Atlantic, and the sum total is appalling. The balance sheet for the year will present a large sum on the debit side of the commerce of the world. —Tribune.

. . . . Crimes and casualties are now so numerous and monstrous that the public mind is aroused as never before. It seems as if the powers of nature and of sin had united to make a record of events for the year now closing sufficient in all its details to appall the stoutest heart. The daily papers are crowded with murders, robberies and manifold crimes that exhaust ingenuity and boldness, while fire, and flood, and shipwreck add their tales of horror with a frequency and extent that have never before been known. There may be those who believe in chance, or who believe in nothing, who profess to "take things as they come," and see nothing unusual in a condition of things that might well make us all pause in breathless anxiety. We may be old fashioned in our ideas but we still hold to the belief that there is a God who governs this world, and who permits or prevents as seemeth unto him best. We do hold that it is possible for men and communities to become so wicked, so regardless of God, so "wise in their own eyes," so puffed up with vain glory, so reckless of the rights of others, and so indifferent to the sanctity of life, that the Divine ruler takes startling ways to manifest his displeasure. We do believe in special providences, and we feel that it is wise to listen to the voice, "Be still and know that I am God."—Watchman and Reflector.

. . . . A curious question in life insurance is liable to arise in Delaware, growing out of the recent murder of a negro by Prof. West, the horrible details of which have been related in the public prints. His professed object in killing and mutilating the negro was that the body might be mistaken for his own, and that thereby he might defraud the insurance companies out of $25,000, the amount for which his life was insured. Some days after his disappearance, however, he returned and confessed both the deed and the purpose. The question which now arises is, if West is hanged for the murder, will the companies be compelled to pay the insurance to his family? This question is now exciting almost as much interest in Delaware as the murder did, especially as, if the companies are compelled to pay it, it will be for their interest to get his punishment commuted to imprisonment for life.

. . . . Jay Gould has surrendered $9,000,000 worth of stock, lands, and other securities to the Erie Railway, which withdraws its suits against him. Gould may have made this restitution because he could not help himself, but Wall street believes that he will find his account in the manipulation of 200,000 shares of Erie stock which he has quietly gathered during the negotiations. With these he may repeat the game so successful in the case of Northwestern common a few weeks ago, or may attempt to regain some of his lost power in the Erie Board. Gould tells the New York reporters that hereafter he expects to be consulted in the management of the road. The funds which have thus been recovered will be used, report says, in laying a third rail on the Erie track to enable the narrow guage western roads to send freight through to New York without breaking bulk.

. . . . Disasters on land and sea by storm and flood, in both hemispheres, have been crowded thickly into the record of the past week. Dispatches from Europe on Saturday evening gave further accounts of the shipwrecks caused by the late terrible storm. In the northeast of France serious inundations have been the result of the heavy rains which had swollen the various streams. Lille was so flooded that part of the city had to be vacated by the inhabitants; many of the factories were closed; several of the bridges were under water; and what crops remained unsecured were swept away or destroyed. Coming at this season of the year, these and other numerous calamities must be felt very severely. But in all the dispensations of Providence there is some weighty lesson. Latterly, in the press and on the platform, there has been a marked tendency to ignore everything higher than human skill, wisdom and foresight. A dangerous self-sufficiency is painfully manifest. Visitations by tempest and flood show strikingly how feeble and dependent we all are. While no gift to man is to be despised, it must not be estimated above the real Giver. Conceit and infidelity, the result of a departure from dependence on God, are fatal both to material progress and eternal welfare.—N. Y. Witness

ABROAD.

. . . . Nearly 500 lives have been lost by marine disasters in the past two weeks, says a Liverpool paper.

. . . . The Republicans in the Cortes have resolved to support a vote of confidence in the present ministry, only on condition that the Government declare unequivocally in favor of the immediate abolition of slavery throughout the Spanish dominions.

. . . . There is nothing very definite concerning French affairs. We know of nothing more uncertain than the to-morrow of French politics. On the whole, the indications are favorable to the continuance of M. Thiers in power.

. . . . Europe has entered upon a deluge cycle. Germany, Denmark, Italy and France have suffered severely from floods this winter, and now large portions of England have been submerged by the heavy rains and the consequent rise of the rivers. More or less suffering is the inevitable result of these disasters.

. . . . While in this country a drouth of unusual severity is prevailing, in Europe there have lately been excessive rains. While here cisterns, wells and streams are drying up, there great floods and inundations are alarmingly frequent. The reader need not be told of the disastrous flood in Northern Germany a month ago, nor of the extensive floods in Italy. A few days ago some parts of Great Britain were similarly visited, and subsequently some parts of France; and now the cable reports another disastrous rain and snow storm in England.

. . . . Japan has recently taken two important progressive steps which indicate that the recent report of a conservative reaction among the rulers of that Empire is untrue. The first of these steps is the decision to create an elective Parliament of two Houses, and numbering 600 members, by which step, for the first time in the history of Japan, the people will have a voice in public affairs. The second step is the issuing of a decree by the Government, which makes the sale of young females for the purposes of prostitution, illegal under severe penalties, and thereby removes one of the worst features of the Japanese polity.

. . . . The telegraph reports that Peru has become intensely indignant over the affair of the ship Maria Luz, and has ordered war vessels to Japan to demand satisfaction. The Maria Luz is a coolie ship, engaged in the slave trade. During stress of weather she put into a Japanese port, and, when the nature of her cargo became known, the authorities of Yokohama boarded her and removed the coolies, sending them back to China at their own request, and also at the request of a Chinese High Commissioner, who was sent by his Government to investigate the case. The action of the Japanese authorities was entirely creditable to their humanity, although heathen, and, if the Christian Government of Peru insists upon demanding satisfaction, we trust that China and Japan will combine and render satisfaction by blowing the war vessels of this Christian Government sky-high.

Correspondence.

From Our English Correspondent.

About the middle of last week a telegram was received from Italy informing us of the presentation of a bill in the Italian parliament, for the suppression of the religious corporation of the city of Rome. Just afterward we read a communication from a special correspondent of one of our dailies, which had been written ere the swift winged message fled along the submarine cable. Said he:

"There is a certain agitation in the air, and evident excitement of men's minds about the approaching openings of the Italian Parliament and the convent bill. The clericals are again looking all round the horizon for possible crusaders, or signs from heaven. The French have celebrated a mass at S. Luigi dei Francesi for the celestial guidance of the Versailles Assembly, and there are all sorts of wild reports as to impossible alliances between the Neri and the Rossi."

In the year 1866, '7, '8, and '70, there was passed amid a tumult of protests, a series of measures which suppressed the religious corporations of the kingdom of Italy and converted the proceeds of their property to the use of the States. The Finance Ministers then saw the necessity of serving the Papal dominion in the same way; but the time for Rome had not then arrived. Now, however, that time has come, and young Italy calls to the Ministers of Grace and Justice to act with reference to the province and city of Rome.

"Property to the annual value of $1,500,000 is to be appropriated by the State. The religious corporations in the city and province of Rome are to be suppressed as land owners, or are henceforth to stand on the same footing as civil corporations. The appropriated property will be converted into Rentes, and the members will become the inalienable pensioners of the State."

Of course the Catholics do not like this. They are all astir. They have been hoping that France, and possibly the other continental powers would have dictated to, and deterred Italy from her purpose, but the poor old Papa, and the perishing Papacy, have lost their day, and according to the Scriptures, are going on to their end. How humiliating and distressing it must have been to the "faithful," to have read such a remark as that made by the Austrian minister. We cut it from a Catholic papers "Count Andrassy, the Austrian minister for foreign affairs, has stated on a late occasion that in the work of endeavoring to save the religious houses in Rome he has been supported only by the Turkish government."

There's support! A whipped and crippled nation; and another whose life is daily despaired of—who only lives because Russia is merciful enough to give her a letting alone.

Where's the French nation, now? Where the Spanish? Where every infinitesimal second-rate Papal kingdom? Echo answers "where?"

Significantly, prophetically true is the moan of the Univers this week; it is the moan of a thoroughly Catholic weekly; it is a weeping for the dying. Says that ultramontane organ:—

"Rome is in mourning and the Pontiff is a captive; the faithful are not secure from insult and worse; even within the churches there exists security neither for property nor life at this moment in the Eternal city."

Says the Echo, in a sensible leader on the subject:—

"It is one of the last strokes dealt to the Papal power in Rome; and, if it be passed into law, the distinctions which have heretofore existed between the Italian kingdom and the incorporated Papal territory will be very nearly obliterated....In a dozen years we have witnessed a greater diminution of the power of the Pope in Italy than all the reformers effected in a century of proselytism in Germany and France. Fresh contests and disputes and collisions between the church and the State in Italy will occur, no doubt, for the latter, being the custodian of the property of the former, will be obliged to arbitrate between rival doctrines claiming to be true, the Pope declaring that such and such teaching is true and to be accepted, and the latter affirming that it is inconsistent with the rights of the State. And the result of these jarrings will be always, doubtless, still further to weaken the temporal power of the Roman church. What will be her resource in her day of need?

Ah! says the Catholic, those Italians mean death to the Papacy. Doubtless they do. But they are not the tools of caprice; but a rod in the hand of God to break the fourth kingdom. The world sees it all; but not in the light of the Book, and thus is puzzled with the swiftly transpiring events:—

These things are only in reference to the convent and religious order bill. But they do not represent more than one-third the trouble of the decayed Popedom and Papacy.

There is other trouble at Rome in the court of the Sovereign Pontiff! It seems that this court of the vicegerent has become ridiculously small. Never, to our knowledge, did the Roman curia dwindle down to such a few cardinals as there are at present in Rome. The smallest number we know of was when the conclave opened at Venice, after the death of Pius VI, under the protection of Russian bayonets, then only twenty-one were present. But now the cardinals are "growing daily less and less,"—Catholic authority for it—and "not more than a dozen remain of those who form what is called the court." This looks like decline at home, and a departure of old grandeur and glory.

But the worst of all to the Papacy is its loss of spiritual government and jurisdiction in three or four of the Continental nations. The discontent, departure, and defiance shown by Catholics all over Europe to the dogma of infallibility, mark as though they would increase Romish church. Long ago the celebrated Pere Hyacinthe seceded, from the order to which he belonged; Garassi did not remain in the fold; Dollinger, and all the heroes of the "old Catholic" community, have gone away from the head of the apostacy; and now we read: "The Abba Meissas, chaplain of the church of St. Genevieve, Paris, has written to the Archbishop of Paris resigning living, and announcing that he has joined the old Catholics." Thus the church of Rome is losing some of her greatest men.

Add to this the insubordination of many leading Catholics in refusing to excommunicate priests under them, because they could not consistently embrace that last imposition of Papal coinage; and the resignation of others onthe same account; and these together will show that the church is now more of a schism than an other. She may shake her skirts and declare herself free, calling all theses apostate and heretics, but the world is too wise to swallow the statements of a Jesuit fraternity.

Put to this the hatred of the nations of Europe have to this Catholic "Sovereignty," and the picture will be complete. It is one of distress. It is a compound of three woes. Wo on the temporal power—wo on the spiritual power—and wo on the social power. Truly it may be said to the Papacy: "Their end is come; and the measure of their iniquity." Respecting the kingdoms and nations hear what the Papists witness against themselves:

"In Germany the persecution of the church has become epidemic. From Prussia it has spread into Hesse, and thence into Baden, the "model state," where the premonitory symptoms have just appeared and a crisis is likely to set in soon. The people of the Black Forest are Catholic to a man, and in Freiburg as well as in Constance the teaching of youth had hitherto been mostly in the hands of members of religious orders.... But all of a sudden the fiat has issued that clerical instruction must cease forthwith, and thus the Paderborn "Sisters of Christian Charity" have been ordered to close their schools within a month. No reason whatever is assigned for this arbitrary decree....In the small duchy of Baden as many as five hundred places of elementary teachers are vacant at the present moment."

Other testimony is familiar to your readers. Of the whole—taking a general review—one editor has said, comparing the struggle of the church with the nations, and the state of the church at Rome:

"But even of more interest than these problems is the curious struggle which is going on between the Roman church and the States on the continent—a struggle of which the introduction of the Bills we have mentioned, and the affair Secchi, are so many episodes. We seem to stand beside another reformation, of which States and governments are the Luthers and Calvins, and the greatness whereof the very actors themselves are almost unconscious."

So you see by the foregoing, God is fulfilling his word—and the day of God will come soon and in its time. Amen.

The bearer of the monthly allowance to his holiness was received by Cardinal Antonelli on the last occasion with great urbanity, but his offering was, as usual, rejected, his eminence assuring the messenger that the Pope ignored all the changes in Rome and the Pontifical States utterly. Thanks to the devotion of the faithful, the Holy Father was in need of nothing.—Correspondent from Rome.

Silly! To "ignore" the charges is not to review them. Ignore them or not they have taken place. As though a man should sit on the sand and ignore the ebbing wave, till he was drowned!

From L. D. F. Armstrong.

In regard to THE TIMES, myself and family have been pleased and profited with its weekly perusal, though perhaps not in full agreement or sympathy with all its sentiments as presented by its various contributors; but we feel convinced that all are seeking after the truth.

I am not led to expect such blessed union in sentiment in this imperfect state, however desirable; but of course I cannot believe with some who have thought or tried to teach, that diversity of belief and practice among the professed followers of Jesus, is, in the providence and economy of God, a wise arrangement. I think it all or a part of it at least is connected with our early training, and false teaching, creating a prejudice in favor of views and practice which however erroneous is with some mental constitutions difficult to overcome. Connected with this it seems to me is the fact that there are one or more passages of Scripture as we have them rendered that are somewhat difficult to harmonize with others and perhaps the greater number [illegible] which some reasonably base th[illegible] clusions as to the real [illegible] signed to be taught by the [illegible] God. Then again all of [illegible] who perhaps are really God's dear children are not such diligent stude[illegible] of the word, and making the most [illegible]ll the means within their reach, as to enable them to arrive at truth, irrespective of their early training and prejudices.

Then again perhaps some from their circumstances and associations have not the time and opportunities to search out the truth as others have. And then, again is it not too lamentably true that many, too many, are to be found, who, holding the truth in unrighteousness, are by their inconsistent walk and conversation, not only giving the lie to their profession, but are stumbling blocks in the way of many who would be otherwise earnest inquirers after truth, though it be contrary to their preconceived notions.

I tell you my brother that among the body of advent believers so called if the greater number of preachers or teachers and lay members had less of the spirit of simple contention for the truth (perhaps after all with some the mere shell of truth, the word without the spirit), and more of the power of that truth which while it lays hold of the coming and kingdom of Jesus as near at hand, does at the same time have a sanctifying influence in leading to a holy separation from a world that lieth in the wicked one, and begets a spirit within them like unto the spirit of our divine Master, who, while pronouncing the inevitable doom upon the once holy city of Jerusalem, could weep over it as well as faithfully expostulate with its ungrateful inhabitants. We are exhorted to be living epistles of the truth, known and read of all men, And "so let our lips and lives express the holy gospel we profess." There is yet and there will still be, as there has always been in past a power in the life and conduct of the believer moulded and influenced in all things by the truth as it is in Jesus, over and above all mere preaching, teaching or exhortation. Blessed is that man, who called to preach the word, goes forth in the Spirit, as in obedience to the Master whose sole errand to this world was to seek and to save the lost.

The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one who truly believes it with the heart unto righteousness. The preaching of this gospel is not merely to bring men's minds to the mere acceptance of certain abstract truths concerning Christ Jesus in the power and glory of his coming kingdom. We may theoretically believe all about Christ and his second glorious appearing to establish his everlasting kingdom on earth and with it all be really destitute of a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. The all-important thing is to apprehend him as his name (Jesus) imports—Savior. "He shall be called Jesus because he shall save his people from their sins." And to heartily receive him as such is to have Jesus "formed in us the hope of glory." As we have his spirit witnessing with ours that we as believers are the children of God, and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ to his coming kingdom and glory; an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled and which shall never fade away, reserved in heaven for all those who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. When will the time come, when, among Advent believers, as well as all believers they shall understand that by grace are we saved through faith and that not of ourselves. It is the gift of God, not of works. (Why?) Lest any man should boast. It does read—Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life. It does read—work out your own salvation with fear and trembling It does read—To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the Paradise of God, and to him shall be given to eat of the hidden manna, and to him will be given a white stone, and in the stone a new name written which no man knoweth but he only who receiveth it. And he shall have power over the nations, and to him shall be given the morning star and he shall be clothed in white, and his name shall not be blotted out of the book of life, and Jesus will confess his name before his Father and before his holy angels. And Jesus further says, that such an one shall be made a pillar in the temple of his God, and he shall go no more out, and he will write upon him the name of his God, and the name of the city of his God, even the New Jerusalem: and he will write upon him his own new name, and to crown it all he shall [illegible]own with Christ on his throne; [illegible]rom being an heir of glory here [illegible] shall become an inheritor with Christ of his eternal kingdom. That will be when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption and this mortal shall have put on immortality, and death shall have been swallowed up of life, even life forever more. Then indeed shall all tears be wiped away, for there shall be no sad hearts there. All sorrow and sighing shall have fled away. And this all will continue on and on throughout the ages of ages in the new heaven and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness, wherein God shall be all and in all.

Jesus shall indeed see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied, not only in the eternal salvation of his own from sin, but in the eternal destruction of all evil—the Devil and his works, and with the Devil the everlasting destruction of all evil doers. Amen and amen. So let it be, doubtless will respond every believing heart. But while all this is to be attained by the overcomers. Let us never for one moment forget, how it is, and by whom, and through whom it is that we not only inherit the glory but are enabled to overcome. Let us never forget that it is because God worketh in us both to will and to do of his own good pleasure. That we overcome by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of his power. It is because we are already saved, already purchased, redeemed by his most precious blood already shed for us: it is because eternal life is already ours, though for a season only hid with Christ in God. Safe keeping, far safer than in the hands or expectations of merely (as Adam was) probationers for holiness and eternal life.

Jesus came to seek and to save the lost. None but an Almighty arm or power could save them. They needed something more than a mere helper, they were morally and judicially dead. They were condemned already and the [illegible]th of God abiding upon, them. Th[illegible] were to have no further trial under [illegible]ncertain probation. What they needed [illegible] salvation from death, the death and [illegible] which they lay and which unless d[illegible]e power interposes and saves them through resurrection to the future and eternal life to come will leave them eternally under the condemnation which is death. For this is the wages of sin; not simply a rejection of Christ as a savior from death in the abstract, although this forever seals and shuts out all hopes of the rejectors of his offered grace of life only in Christ, and who, although they are to be raised temporarily to life, not with an immortal undying nature, but to see what they might have had, and to be judged not only in the mind of God, a holy as well as a loving God, but before an intelligent and holy universe, and by that savior whose love and salvation they had scorned, and said in act as well as words, "Away with him! Away with him! Crucify him! Crucify him! we will not have this man Christ Jesus to reign over us. We will not come unto him that we may have life."

Upon that dazzling throne of glory and of Judgment they will behold the rejected, the crucified one, but now the risen, the exalted one, in whose hands are seen to be the destinies of all mankind. Upon his right hand they will see an innumerable company of the redeemed out of the lost whom Jesus came to save. Among them perhaps a father, a mother, a sister or brother, a wife a husband or a child beloved. But now they realize what perhaps before they doubted, that there is really to be an eternal separation from the dearest earthly object of affection. How aggravated their guilty rejection of God's only way of salvation! How just is their own estimation now, as well as in the estimation of holy angels and that redeemed throng on the right hand of the Judge, the sentence—Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels! Ye are and were of your father, the devil, and the lusts of your father ye would do; and it is but meet that you receive the same condemnation that is to be meted out to him. Like him you have proved yourself unworthy of eternal life, and by your continued sin and persistent rejection of him who alone is the resurrection and the life, the way, the truth and the life, yea, the eternal life itself. You have forever forfeited all right and title to further existence. Therefore, receive your final sentence, to be cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death, a death from which there is to be no resurrection to life again!

Oh! the infinite value of an interest in the atoning blood of Jesus. How foolish, as well as guilty, to reject his offered mercy and grace. Now is the accepted time; for now is the time, now is the day of salvation. Let me entreat all my brethren and sisters in the Lord, with myself, to make our calling and election sure. Let us show forth in our life the fruits of a living union with Christ, the living Vine. Though fruit-bearing of itself will not save us, it is evidence of our union to him who has saved us. By this shall all men know ye are (not shall be) my disciples, if ye do whatsoever I command you. Life first, and the manifestations of life following. Live and do. Not as some wrongfully teach: Do and live! This last is the divine order reversed. • O sinner, come to Christ, the Life-giver, and receive life. Flee, O flee from the city of destruction, and escape for thy life. Look to Jesus! Jesus only can do sinners good. He alone can save you.

From Stephen Pike, Winneshiek Co., Iowa.

I write you under circumstances most hopeful for the truth. The word of the Lord, under the ministrations of Br. Peter Mitson, of Elliota, Minn., who has been with us for a few days, has fallen upon good ground and is bringing forth blessed fruits. Br. Mitson, and Br. Wm. Chapman, of Howard Co., Iowa, who has lately been thrust out of the Baptist church because he confessed like one of old that Jesus had opened his eyes,—were with us on Saturday, Nov. 30, and dispensed the word of life to a goodly number, many of whom listened for the first time to Advent preaching. The Methodist minister listened to the preaching by Br. M., from Phil. 3: 20, 21—"For our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Sávior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Br. M. showed from the Scriptures that the faith once delivered to the saints, preached by the apostle Paul and the other disciples to the church and world in their day is the faith of the Advent church now. He showed the effect of the word preached in that day upon those who believed, turning them "from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven." The word preached in that day is applicable now. These are ever "present truths" with which the church should be comforted. Sunday morning, Br. Chapman preached on the inheritance of the saints, showing that instead of a "sky kingdom," God has promised them this earth, after its re-genesis, for an everlasting possession. Other discourses followed during the day. The preacher referred to came to my house Monday evening, and in conversation with Br. Mitson stated candidly that he dissented from most of the views presented in the discourse of Saturday night. Br. M. asked him to state his objections, that they might reason together. This he refused to do, but said he would show what he believed in a discourse the following Sunday. He did, however, express himself upon one point. The line of argument followed by Mitson (the gist of which he claimed was embodied in isolated Scripture quotations) implied the unconscious state of the dead between death and the resurrection, a proposition which he did not believe, as man was of a dual nature, composed of soul and body. The body the house or tenement, the soul the tenant inhabting the body during man's natural life. Br. Mitson then asked him which God addressed when speaking to the human family—the house or the tenant? He replied he spoke to the tenant, of course. He was then referred to Gen. 3: 18—"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread until thou return unto the ground: for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." This was a poser; and being unable to answer, our friend took his hat, saying he did not come to discuss these matters, but would show on next Sunday what he believed.

Br. Mitson remained through the week, dispensing the word to a people who, I venture to say, have heard more Bible from the pulpit during the last ten days than they have heard from the same source before in years. And what is more, the sanctity of the book shelf has been disturbed, and Bibles covered with the accumulated dust of years have been brought out and made to bear witness in the case. From a state of careless content the place has been suddenly transformed into a community of Bible students.

As there is no church building completed in the place, religious services are held in the school house. Thursday night was the time of the regular Methodist prayermeeting, Br. M. attended. The minister opened the meeting over the head of the class leader, by telling the few assembled that they had been listening to a great deal of sound and fury through the week, and that though one might make a great noise and get up a good deal of excitement, if the grace of God was not in it, it would not avail. He warned his hearers against drawing conclusions from uncertain data or predicating a hope upon the doubtful import of a few isolated passages of Scripture. A good point in our favor, although he did not see it. He closed with an admonition to his hearers, to beware of false doctrine. At an appropriate moment toward the close of the meeting, Br. Mitson made a few remarks appropriate to the time and circumstances. At the conclusion of the meeting a Methodist brother and sister, two of the most prominent members of the church in the place, came directly to Br. Mitson and invited him home with them, being anxious to learn more of the word. Searching into the Scriptures for light with a zeal according to knowledge, they found it, and now place their hope upon the platform of eternal truth. A Baptist brother has also through grace found light in the word, and others are seeking to know if these things are so. The wedge is inserted, and impelled by the motive power of God's truth, old prejudices are being riven, and truths old as the word itself (long buried beneath the dust of human wisdom, embodied in ponderous tombs of theological lore) are coming to the surface and shine with a hallowed light amid the surrounding gloom. I could write you more of the to us cheering news, but must not make my letter too long. Pray for us.

From Mary A. Tibbetts.

As it is my privilege and pleasure to send you five new subscribers, I cannot forbear telling the waiting ones of our very interesting prayer meetings at the Volga church. We meet every Lord's day evening, and on every occasion, the divine presence has been richly manifested in our midst. We have had precious brethren and sisters added to us, who seem, in the apostle's language, to be converted, their "spirit, soul and body," and even their pockets to the service of the Lord. Their hearts are all aglow with the Savior's love and their frequent testimonies in every meeting, show the visible progress they have made since their profession of faith in Christ. I can scarcely tell in words of the joyous spiritual interviews we have together in the glorious anticipation of meeting our soon coming Lord.

In addition to these sanctuary feasts, the sweet incense of morning and evening prayer ascends from the family altars that have so recently been erected in our midst. Oh! I trust no Advent brother or family will neglect this precious privilege of thus publicly honoring God in their families as well as in the sanctuary. Aside from the comfort it brings to our own hearts, remember we are watched on every side; and if we as Adventists do not keep up a spiritual practice equal to our profession, we shall lose our influence and bring the blessed Bible truth we hold so dear, into reproach, and thereby give our enemies cause to doubt the sincerity of our faith in the doctrine we profess.

Letter from the Welch Brother.

Some of you may have said, why do we not hear from the Welch brother? Is he dead, or has he lost his interest in the cause of our master? No, I am not dead, nor do I ever want to be. I want to live forever. I am steadfast in the faith, and praise the Lord for the light breaking through the dark cloud of theology. I am now serving my own generation in the best manner I know how.

I some time ago called myself a lonely Welchman. We are not far advanced yet. We only number six or seven. The opposition comes from every direction. The Welch press is shut against us, and we have no preacher. There is more fighting for me than any other man. I must arise and put on the armor every day and fight against evil in all its forms, wherever I meet it. I must hate what is wrong with all my heart. Oh help me, O Lord to be anything but traitor or deserter. I have tried to do the duty which lay nearest me. I may not have succeeded; that I dare not say. Pardon my infinite shortcomings and take the will for the deed, good Lord! Strike not my unworthy name out of the roll-call of thy noble and victorious army.

Not many of my kinsmen according to the flesh love Christ's appearing the second time. If I urge or maintain the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand," his personal reign and the saint's inheritance in the earth renewed, and the unconscious state of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked, the whole race resist the truth, except six or seven Every press is free to them to ridicule us! every press is shut against me. I must work alone. Who will preach the gospel to the Welch? who?

JOHN POWELL.

From C. H. Sweet, Bonny Eagle, Me

You no doubt will be pleased to learn that we are in the midst of a glorious reformation at Steep Falls, Me. Thirteen who never before made a profession of religion have sought the Lord, and a number of backsliders have been reclaimed. Many others are powerfully convicted, and we are confident that some of them will start out soon. Remember us in your prayers. More anon.

Laying up Joy.

I have heard a gentleman who was once relating to a company of friends an account of an accident which he had witnessed years before, when a stage coach was overturned into a river, and the passengers were with difficulty delivered from imminent danger and a watery grave. Among them was a man and his wife and their little daughter, all of whom were mercifully preserved, the gentleman who told the story having rescued the child with his own hands.

As he related the account, a young lady in the company seemed deeply interested, and when he announced himself as the deliverer of the little girl, she sprang forward to greet him, saying, "I was the little girl," telling him how she had longed to see and thank her unknown preserver.

We cannot well describe the pleasure of such a surprise as this, even in view of a mere temporal deliverance much less can we portray the deeper gladness of the redeemed of God, when the countless saved ones shall greet the instrument of their salvation in the glory of their eternal home.

The writer remembers with pleasure the greeting of a young man who, at a public gathering, grasped his hand with that peculiar "grip" that none of the dark-lantern "lodges" can ever teach, and claimed his acquaintance. "I do not know you." "No? But I know you; you shook hands with me one day in B——, and looked in my face and asked me if I was a Christian. I never could get rid of that question till I found the Lord."

It was a pleasure to see how heartily he entered into the Master's service; and though the occasion and the question had long passed from the writer's mind, yet he could but thank God who had thus used an unworthy servant for the good of a perishing soul.

But what tongue can tell the gladness of the glorified, who, when standing amid the shining multitudes of the redeemed, or wandering on the banks of life's fair river shall start at the visions of some well-remembered face, and rush to grasp the hand that led them first to mercy's altar, and point their tearful eyes to behold the Lamb of God who bore the sins of men upon the tree? And such surprises and such greetings will be frequent in that day.

The mother who wept over her godless children till her last tear was shed, and prayed for their salvation till her last prayer was offered, and then lay down to sleep in death, trusting in the promises of a covenant keeping God, shall then greet her offspring, saved at last, and they shall honor her as they never did before.

The humble pilgrim who has toiled, and prayed, and lived for God unnoticed and unknown, and who has deemed his station low, and his life almost a failure, shall then meet the saved men and women and children, to whom his weary yet trustful life was like the light of a burning lamp in midnight darkness, which led their feet to home, and peace, and joy, and rest.

The minister of God who in toil and poverty and tears has sown the precious seed of heavenly truth, shall see with joy the garnered harvest in that day, and shall feel with Paul that his bliss will then be complete. "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? For ye are our glory and our joy."

What a day will that be for the servants of the Most High, when they shall gather their flocks to the heavenly fold, and bring their sheaves to the eternal garner! Then those who have traversed the world to bear the message of redemption, shall come home at last to rest in peace. And throngs of blessed ones whom they have begotten in Christ Jesus by the word of truth, shall come to greet them, and hail them as beloved fathers in the gospel of the Son of God. And ever and anon shall come a radiant form, seeking out some glory-crowned laborer who once scattered his tears along his pathway as he came to them with tidings of redeeming love, and bringing others to look upon his face once so wan and pale and tearful, but now so luminous with joy and immortality, and to give him greeting such as earthly love has never given.

Oh, in that day, when the treasures, and joys, and pomps, and splendors of this world shall pass forever from our view; when earth shall seem like vanity, and life an idle dream, it will be found that the laborer for God has done a work, and gained a joy, compared with which the noblest works and highest joys of earth are empty, void and vain. Then, when the folly of the rich, the wise, the ambitious, and the proud shall be made manifest, it shall be seen that "he that winneth souls is wise;" "and they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." (Prov. 11: 30; Dan. 12: 3.)—The Church.

GOD says, "Repent." The sinner answers, "I mean to." "Believe." "Yes, I intend to." "Prepare to meet thy God." "Such is my purpose." "Turn ye, for why will you die?" "I intend to turn before the hour of death." "What thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." "Yes, I believe that is the right way, and I intend to be zealous for God some time." "Now is the accepted time." "No, not now." "To-day is the day of salvation." "No, not to-day; I must attend to other concerns to-day." "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." "But to-morrow will be as well, or next month, or next year." "To-day if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." "Go thy way this time; when I have a convenient season I will call for thee." Thus does God invite, beseech, and command, and thus do men hesitate, temporise, or delay till they are lost.

Our Young Folks.

I'm Not too Young.

"I'm not too young for God to see:
He knows my name, and nature too;
And all day long he looks at me,
And sees my actions through and through.

He listens to the words I say;
He knows the thoughts I have within;
And, whether I'm at work or play,
He's sure to see it if I sin.

If some one great and good is near,
It makes us careful what we do;
And how much more ought we to fear
The Lord, who sees us through and through.

Thus when inclined to do amiss,
However pleasant it may be,
I'll always try to think of this,—
I'm not too young for God to see."

Waiting for Jesus.

From heavy sleep little Paul Clifford suddenly awoke, and staring with great wondering eyes upon unfamiliar walls, started impetuously up in bed, but came back with a quick, sharp cry of pain. A gentle face bent over him.

"What is it, dear?"

"Where am I?" said Paul, faintly, "and what is the matter?"

"Oh, you can't remember, poor little child! You have had a terrible fall, and it has hurt you very much; but we hope to make you all well in a little while. Don't think anything more about it, now, but try to go to sleep again."

Paul shuddered. "Oh, I remember now—those cruel, cruel doctors; how they screwed my poor leg, and put fire on my back. Father would not have let them, if he had been here." And the poor child's breast heaved painfully.

"They tried to be kind," said the nurse, with a tear in her eye; "but I know it is very hard to bear. But, now, see, darling, the worst is over; they have set your leg, and tried to do something for your poor back, and now you have only got to be very still, and get well as fast as you can. Come," said she, as his face grew calm, "we will have a very nice time together. Shall I read till you go to sleep?"

"I can't sleep any more now, please," said little Paul, wearily.

"Then I will shake your pillows, so that you can look around and see all the pleasant little children."

Very tenderly she raised his head, but not so carefully but that he felt that strange sensation of fire on his back, and groaned, although he bit his proud young lips, and tried to smile his thanks to the sweet faced lady. Very languidly, at first, did he raise his heavy lids, but he soon became more interested, for this is what he saw:

A long, cheerful room, lined on two sides with little cots, with snowy coverlids and soft white pillows, and in a pretty sacque of pink or blue, like a bird, in each fair nest, was sitting or lying a patient little child. They were all so very young. One was not more than two years old, and the greatest veteran in the company had not counted more than eight or nine birthdays. But every one already knew what it was to suffer pain, and around some of the sweet, small mouths there were sweet, patient lines, very touching to see in such baby faces. Paul looked earnestly from one to another. He noticed the little girl opposite, singing softly and contentedly to her wooden doll, pressed close to her white, thin cheeks; he saw the clear eyed little boy next to her, peering eagerly into the mechanism of a toy steam-engine, entirely unmindful of the helpless arm tied up in a sling; and another child, a little further on, turning over a picture-book, and almost forgetting his poor paralyzed feet, upon which he would never walk again.

"Yes," sighed Paul to himself, "they seem happy enough, but they must have been here a great while, and forgotten how splendid everything is out in the sunshine; but I—only yesterday, I could run faster than any other boy on the street, and now—" the tears gathered in his eyes.

"I am very sorry for you, little boy," said a sweet voice, and, turning, he found it came from his next neighbor, whose cot was only a few feet from his own.

The speaker was a little girl, with very fair hair, and a skin so transparent that he could trace the delicate blue veins on her temples; and as he looked at her innocent face, he wondered to see himself thinking of the fair white lilies he had once seen when he peered through the fence of a rare city garden. Paul felt himself greatly comforted, he scarcely knew why, by the look and words of sympathy, and a quick, impulsive friendship sprang up between the fellow-sufferers. It was not long before Paul was telling her his story—how "mother died, and father and he went to live with aunt Margaret, who was poor, and had ever so many children, and was sometimes very cross. Then father, dear father, went off to the wars, and told him that as soon as he was old enough, he should be a soldier too. Ever since father sailed he had been longing for him, and when any of the soldiers went away, he always wanted to see them, because they were going where father was; and so, one day, when he climbed a tree, to see a procession go past, poor Ben Butler, who was half foolish, would creep out on the same limb. It began to crack, and he thought poor Ben would not know how to save himself, so he tried to jump to another branch, but missed, and fell—down—down—on the hard pavement, and didn't know any more till the doctors—" his voice quivered.

"Never mind," said Lucy, "don't tell any more." And they mingled their tears.

Then Lucy, in her turn, told him that "she had already been there two years, and never expected to be well, but knew that she would live in the little cot till she died."

"But you don't seem to mind it at all," said Paul, looking wonderingly at her smiling face.

"No," said Lucy, "I am very happy. Very few sick children have such nice clean beds, and such nice pleasant nurses to care for them. Do you know this is L—— hospital, and the nurses are ladies—some of them very rich—who come here just because they love God, and want to do something to please him?"

"And do they stay here all their lives, to take care of sick children?"

"That's just as they please," said Lucy. "Some of them stay a few, and some a good many years; and besides taking care of us, they have a great many sick men and women in the other rooms."

"I should think God would love them very much," said Paul, looking affectionately after the nurse, flitting noislessly, in her soft dark dress, from one little cot to another. "But, Lucy," he began, after a long pause, "I suppose girls can keep still easier than boys; but I am sure I could never smile again if I thought I must stay here all my life. Oh, Lucy! have you forgotten how splendid it is to run and jump? It would just break my heart if I did not think I should get well soon, and go to be a soldier with my father. How can you smile so, Lucy?"

"I'm waiting for Jesus," said Lucy, softly.

"What do you mean?"

"Why," said Lucy, "the nurse reads to us every day from the Bible, and once she told us about Jesus passing amongst all the sick people and making them well, and I said, "Oh, nurse, if, he only would pass by here, and touch every little cot!" and then she told us that Jesus would come by and by, and then all the sick ones, and all the suffering ones who love his appearing will be made well forever. So," said Lucy, with a strange sweet smile, "I'm waiting for him every day."

"And you really think he'll come?"

"I know it," said Lucy, simply.

Paul looked doubtful, and sinking back upon his pillow wearily, closed his great sad eyes.

The days passed on, and little Paul grew no better, although he learned from Lucy to be very patient, for Christ's sake. One bright May morning he woke, hearing the doctors talking round his bed. They had decided that perhaps one more operation might save his life.

"Will you bear it like a hero, my dear little fellow?" said one kindly.

"I'll try, sir," said Paul, steadily; "for you know I'm to be a soldier one of these days."

"To be sure," said the doctor. "To-morrow, then," and passed on.

Lucy, with eyes full of tears, said, again and again, "Dear Paul, poor dear Paul." But he wanted to be brave, and was afraid he should cry if he looked at her, so he lay very still, with closed eyes, while the sweet Sabbath music stole in from the chapel, where some of the sick men and women were worshiping God. With all his bravery, he could not help shuddering at the cruel suffering on the morrow, thinking how sweet it would be for years to come, as Lucy had said. With a piteous prayer trembling on his lips, he fell into a half slumber, and dreamed that he did indeed see the Savior coming down the long lines of little cots, straight toward his own bed. Paul hid his face from the brightness, but he knew when Jesus touched him, for the pain slipped away softly, and with a glad cry, he opened his eyes. Alas! the old pain came leaping back; ran over his poor back, and shivered down his tired little limbs. With a heavy sigh, he looked around the room. It was flooded with glad sunshine, and one bright beam rested on the sweet picture of Jesus blessing little children and saying, "Suffer them to come unto me." Paul grew calmer while he looked at it. He wanted to tell Lucy that he was almost sure Jesus would come sometime, but he was so very tired. His eyes again closed wearily, nor did they open till, in the twilight, he heard the children singing,

"I know I'm weak and sinful,
But Jesus will forgive."

"Oh, yes," said Paul, starting consciously, as he caught the name, "I almost forgot; Jesus is coming." And he tried to bolster up his thin hand, so it would stay up in the air.

"What are you doing?" said Lucy.

"You see," said Paul, in a dreamy, wandering voice, "I'm afraid Jesus might come in the night, when I was asleep, and I want to keep my hand up so he can find me, and I know I am the boy who has been waiting."

Paul slept late the next day.

"I cannot bear to wake him," said one kind nurse to another. "Poor little fellow! he must suffer so much today, and it will break his heart when he finds he can never be a soldier; for they say he will always be lame."

But little Paul's sufferings were over. He was indeed asleep, but his slumber was like that of Lazarus; only Jesus could wake him. And now he is laid away in the tomb "asleep in Jesus." But Jesus will come, as he promised; and then Paul will see the Savior he loved, who helped him to be so patient.

Accounts Due.

There is a large sum due on Book Accounts, in sums varying from one to fifty dollars and upwards. Prompt payment will greatly relieve our finances. It is only a little for each one; but the aggregate is a large amount.

Some to whom we sent 'Statements of Account' last summer have never made any reply at all. We want to hear from you, and soon. These many little items make up a heavy burden for us to carry. 'Let every one bear their own burden,' and our own will be very much lighter.

Renew Your Subscriptions

We are sending notices to all our subscribers whose time expires this year. In some cases we receive remittances after these notices are prepared and forwarded to the postoffice. If any receive notices after they have sent in their renewals, they can keep the 'return envelope' for another occasion

We have waited patiently upon hundreds of our subscribers for months, and, in some cases two years or more. We trust now every one will promptly remit for past dues, and for six months or a year in advance.

The Destiny of Man

We have examined this work by Br. Wm. Erwin, of the Methodist church, and ordered a supply to accommodate our customers. The author takes up the Scriptures, or most of them which bear directly upon the subject indicated, and searches to know the mind of the Spirit. A large number of copies of the work have been sold among Christians of other churches and it cannot fail to do good. It is finely printed, and bound in full gilt. Price by mail, prepaid, $1 50.

To Correspondents.

E. C ANDRUS. You are certainly right in regarding the claim of any to be now 'born in the spirit,' in any other sense than conversion, as absurd. The word is our guide pre-eminently; any influence that leads us contrary to its letter and spirit is an unholy and not a Holy Spirit....E. E. STURGEON. There are some who will not read. Such are 'willingly ignorant.' We see no way for their escaping the penalty of rejecting the light....F. MILLER. Such letters as yours are very encouraging. Thank you....M. C TICE. It was complete in that number. The allusion to a previous article was a printer's blunder....Mrs C F. HAYNES You succeeded well. Thank you....S. K GIBSON. Appt. came too late for last weeks paper.....SUBSCRIBER. Anonymous communications go into the waste basket....J. T. D. Satisfactory. Do what you can ....W. WOODWORTH. We wrote you a letter answering your questions, but it was returned by the P. M....A. P. MOORE. You will find the passage from Spurgeon (and more of the same sort) in "Sermons, second series," p. 273. New York: Sheldon & Co., 1861. It is contained in the sermon on the resurrection of the dead.

Book Notices, Etc.

THE New York Independent has announced an increase of price from $2 50 to $3 00 a year. It also announces a change of form from the large pages now so familiar, to a more convenient size for easy reading. The reconstruction of this sterling journal will doubtless add to its already unsurpassed excellencies, and make it the religious journal of the world. Its editors and contributors are of eminent ability. Its resources for best of thoughts, for new things, and late phases of religious, political and scientific literature, are unquestionably beyond those of any American weekly.

Notice.

I am now engaged in preparing a work for the press to be called "A History of the first Twenty Years of the Advent Cause in Northern Illinois, from 1853 to 1873." It is designed to give a minute account of all the Conferences held, together with a history, biographical and statistical, of all the churches and ministers connected with the Conference from its first organization to the close of the year 1872.

Will the brethren, and specially those who have been associated with the church from the beginning, be so kind as to write out any items of interest connected with the cause in their vicinity, and send them to me for my assistance in this work. I hope to have it ready for publication during the comin summer.

Address C. C. MARSTON, Amboy, Ill.

The Great South.

The publishers of Scribner's Monthly announce one of the largest and most important enterprises ever undertaken by any illustrated magazine in this country.

They have engaged the services of Mr. Edward King, author of "My Paris," and of various graphic sketches in recent numbers of the magazine, to write a series of twelve papers, on the Life, Condition, and Resources of the Southern States of America. They will be brilliantly illustrated, and will be written with no other object than that of representing, by pen and pencil, one of the most interesting, fruitful, and picturesque regions of our common country. While they will aim to convey reliable information on all the social, industrial, and commercial topics suggested by a personal survey, they will be written in the graphic style, and with the quick insight into character and ready appropriation of incident, which have already given to Mr. King the title of a "born Special Correspondent."

Mr. King will devote the winter mainly to travel and the personal collection of material. He will enter upon his work with the enthusiasm of youth, and with the broad and ready sympathy born of his own cosmopolitan habit; and we bespeak for him, wherever he may go, the confidence and public reception which his personal character and public errand entitle him.

We characterize a portion of our national domain as "The Great West." The South, by its extent of territory and the magnitude of its interests and capacities, deserves no less significant a title. With an area of nearly a million square miles—an area more than seven times larger than the whole of Great Britain—and with a list of tropical products that play a grand part in the commerce of the world, it deserves the largest recognition. Mr. King's article will be entitled "The Great West."

They will be commenced in the Monthly next spring, and will alone be worth the price of a subscription to the Monthly, for they will make a complete illustrated book of themselves, of two hundred and fifty broad magazine pages.

Many of the features of Southern life and landscape are as strange to Northern and Western eyes as if they belonged to another country; so that in painting the South to itself, and giving it a fair showing for its own satisfaction, a most interesting page will be opened to the whole country, and one which will reveal our people at once to themselves and to each other.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an inquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R.," running from Chicago through Galesburg to Burlington, has achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Route to the West. At Burlington it connects with the great Burlington Route which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Chicago on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the C. B. & Q. and Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

An Exposition of Matthew Ch. 24.

[Fourth Article.]

Having endeavored to make this matter plain, we now pass to consider the next event in order in the twenty-fourth of Matthew, ver. 22d. "And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened."

"Those days," in this verse, I understand to refer to the most severe portion of the 1260 years' tribulation. We have before shown that this period of tribulation is divided into two parts, as seen by the opening of the fourth and fifth seals, the last of which comes under the Inquisition of the Romish church, which court was established in the reign of Pope Innocent III. Says Jones in his Church History: "Every mode of torture practiced by the church in the punishment of heretics, up to the time of Pope Innocent III., when compared with those practiced by the Inquisition, was a mere bungling affair."

The object of this infernal institution was to exterminate all who would not bow to the Pope and acknowledge his supremacy, whether Jews, heathen, or Christian (heretic). It was through its instrumentality that the Moors were driven out of Spain in the reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, at the same time 40,000 Jews perished; while the true disciples of our Lord in every land where the triple tyrant held sway, were scourged to prison and to death.

Unless God had interposed and thwarted the designs of the Inquisition, no flesh outside of the apostate church would have been saved from death at its hand. "But for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." God has a special work for his church to do in the time of the end, in publishing the gospel of the kingdom among all nations, for a witness; and while the Inquisition was in full vogue, such a work could not be done without interruption. Hence, to give his church an opportunity to finish the last work of mercy for the world, that tribulation was not suffered to continue to the end, but its days were shortened.

"Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there, believe it not." (v. 23). The time for the cry of Lo here! and Lo there! to be made, is after the ending of the great tribulation, and as may be inferred from the following verses, the cry itself is in respect to the manner of Christ's second coming.

"For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and great wonders, insomuch that if it were possible they would deceive the very elect. Behold I have told you before. Wherefore, if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert, go not forth; behold he is in the secret chamber, believe it not. For as the light cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, so [after this manner] shall the coming of the son of man be!" (v. 24–27). In another section of our exposition of this chapter we have shown that within the last thirteen hundred years, many false mediators have appeared in the professed Christian church, answering to the prediction, "Many shall come in my name, saying I am Christ," etc. But the false Christs of vv. 24. 25 and 26, are of a different class and profession; for these last mentioned came to fulfill the long looked for promise, "If I go away I will come again." By them the personal coming of Christ is ignored, and while they admit that the Scriptures teach such an event as the second coming of Christ, they argue that it is to be fulfilled by proxy. The Shakers, of latter-day date, claim that the second advent of Christ was realized in the person of Ann Lee. The Swedenborgians in the person of Emanuel Swedenborg. While the Spiritists apply it to the spirit manifestations.

These false pretenders have indeed shown great signs and wonders, like Simon Magus of old, "if possible to deceive the very elect" of God, and lead them to relinquish their hope in the personal return of the Nobleman. But the teachings of our Savior are too plain upon this point. They can only be misinterpreted by the enemies of the Lord. Says the Master: "Behold I have told you before. Wherefore, if they shall say, behold he is in the desert, go not forth. Behold he is in the secret chamber, believe it not. For as the lightning that cometh out of the east and shineth unto the west, so shall also the coming of the son of man be;" not as the Shakers say in the person of Ann Lee, in the desert, nor in the secret circles of Spiritists; but as the lightning, lighting the very heavens with glory, coming in all the glory of the Father, with the holy angels. And it is because his coming is thus described as visible, personal, and glorious, that it is not possible to deceive the very elect. Jesus said to his little flock,—"If I go away I will come again and receive you unto myself;" and upon this promise the church for eighteen hundred years has been resting all her hopes of future blessedness and glory. (To be continued).

ALBION ROSS.

What it is to be like Christ.

Having ascertained by Scripture illustration and testimony the point of time when the person becomes like Christ, it remains to be shown by the same process of argumentation in what this "being like Christ" really consists.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST.

This is one of the truest marks of a Christian. If he has the "spirit of Christ" he will be like Christ or Christlike—that's the idea. Paul says truly, If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his. His profession amounts to nothing unless it appears manifestly that he has imbibed the spirit of the Master. And here, let me say, that sermons on "sanctification," and exhortations about "holy living" come with poor grace from the lips of men who seek to ruin their brethren. I think none will dissent from this assertion. Some people have a way of screening their own faults by talking about other folks. For instance, I once knew a minister to preach in a place nearly a week on sanctification; and everybody supposed him to be "such a good man," (except those with whom he personally associated, and some of them because they were duped,) simply because he could talk with such pathos and fluency about the faults and failings of Christians, and make such stirring appeals on holy living, etc., when, if the truth were known, a large portion of that very week was spent by that very same minister in violating one of the simplest and most important principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ, i. e., the admonition of the apostle not to speak evil one of another. And this man professed to enjoy what he called the "second blessing," and repeatedly announced his experience to the audience by the expressive words "I am holy."

I very much doubt whether that man enjoyed at that time even the first blessing of the gospel. Ah! it requires something more than this self-conceit and boasting egotism to constitute a person a child of God. In order to occupy such a position he must have the spirit that was in Christ. And this spirit will not allow one to speak evil of his brethren; neither will it allow him to spend time in hunting of slander to circulate among the credulous This is not the work of one under the influence and guidance of the spirit that was in Jesus. Neither is it the work of one who is "wholly sanctified." The person may profess entire sanctification; but a short experience in our world will convince the most incredulous that "profession" and "possession," are two entirely different things.

Christ had a forgiving spirit. He forgave not only his friends when they by accident or otherwise injured him, but also his enemies, even those who were the most unrelenting. He prayed on the cross for his revilers, that his Father would forgive them, charitably attributing their sin to ignorance and not maliciousness. And this same spirit is in all who are indeed the followers of Christ. But, alas! how many come short. Many are exacting and unyielding. They like the reciprocal laws of bearing and forbearing, but desire them to be practised by other than themselves. Any such are not like Christ. This forgiving spirit was one of the crowning virtues of Christ's sublime character, and no man can be like Christ without possessing it. Somebody has said "It is human to err, but divine to forgive." And certainly this is the true statement of the case. It is not in keeping with the spirit of Christ to chase an erring brother as a hunter would his game, for the purpose of his ruin and death. The recommendation of the gospel is, "restore such an one in the spirit of meekness."

Christ had a loving spirit. He was genial, companionable, loving. Wherever he went he carried a sweet, cheerful spirit. Where he abode all was joy and peace. And when he departed he left behind him the abiding principles of good-will and love. He hated no one. He sought the injury of no one. He was not implacable. The work of a tyrant and oppressor was not his work. No, he was loving. A mission of mercy he came to perform. Reader, if you would be like Christ, you must drink in his spirit of love and good-will. You must become amiable and loving, and possess, in all its depth and fullness the sweet spirit of Jesus.

Without particularising further as to the various attributes of the spirit that was in Christ, allow me to say that if we would be like him, we must have his spirit in all of its power and richness. And this is one of the distinguishing marks of our likeness to Christ.

THE FRUITS OF THE SPIRIT.

Paul gives us a list of precious fruits called "the fruits of the spirit," which are the guaranty of our likeness to Christ. Unless it is seen by those who are witnesses, that these qualities attach themselves to our lives and characters as Christians, then we may rest assured that we have been deceived, and Christ has never been "formed within, the hope of glory." If, howevert we do bring forth these fruits, then may we be assured that God has accepted us, and by his grace we are prepared and meet for the Master's use. For a person of this class to come out before the people and make a public effort to "become wholly sanctified, or receive the second blessing, in order to be prepared for the kingdom of God," is to make a mock of religion, and to bring the cause of the dear Redeemer into contempt before the world.

After enjoying religion for years, and bringing forth the "fruits of the spirit," certainly your Christian life thus far has been a farce and you have been deceived, if indeed you are not prepared for the kingdom of God. What impression would it leave on the mind of an unconverted man for a minister to state in conference meeting that twenty years of his ministerial life was spent with his heart only half converted to Christ, and at the end of those years he gave up all and became "fully the Lord's?" The decision of an impartial jury in that case would be "Guilty of twenty years of hypocrisy, or else the saddest self-deception."

"The fruit of the Spirit is love." The Savior, at one time, said, "by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one to another." And Paul is the authority for saying that this "love" is "greater" than either "faith", or "hope." Love is the first sign of our recognition of God as a member of his family. No one can love the Father without loving the children of the Father: the Bible bears out this idea. As soon as we have the "love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit given unto us," so soon we begin this life of love. Certainly it must be very displeasing to the Father to have his children hate each other.

The fruit of the Spirit is joy. The legitimate result of our attachment to each other as brethren and to Christ as our elder Brother, is joy in our hearts. Who will say this was not the reason why Paul puts joy second in the list of these spiritual fruits? There is no such joy known in this world as is experienced by the child of God. Peter's description is in point. He says it is "unspeakable and full of glory." True we have trials and perplexities in this life, but, blessed be God, in the midst of these we may have peace and joy. This is the result of our relationship with the Lord; it is the fruit of the Spirit. (To be continued.)

The Resurrection.

In the course of his wanderings among the Pyramids of Egypt, Lord Lindsay, the celebrated English traveler, accidentally came across a mummy, the inscription upon which proved to be at least two thousand years old. In examining the mummy after it was carefully unwrapped, he found in one of its enclosed hands a small round root. Wondering how long vegetable life could last, he took the little bulb from that closed hand and planted it in a sunny soil, all the dew and rains of heaven to descend upon it, and in course of time, a few weeks, to his astonishment and joy, that root burst forth and bloomed into a beautiful flower.

This interesting incident suggested to Mrs. S. H. Bradford, an American poetess, the following thoughts upon the Resurrection:

Two thousand years ago a flower
Bloomed lightly, in a far off land;
Two thousand years ago its seed
Was placed within a dead man's hand;

Before the Savior came on earth,
That man had lived and loved and died,
And e'en in that far off time,
The flower had spread its perfume wide.

Suns rose and set, years came and went,
The dead hand kept its treasure well,
Nations were born and turned to dust,
While life was hidden in that shell.

That shriveled hand is robbed at last,
The seed is buried in the earth;
When, lo! the life long hidden there
Into a glorious flower bursts forth!

Just such a plant as that which grew
From such a seed when buried low,
Just such a flower in Egypt bloomed,
And died two thousand years ago.

And will not He who watched the seed
And kept the life within the shell,
When those he loves are laid to rest,
Watch o'er their buried dust as well?

And will not he from 'neath the sod
Cause something glorious to arise?
Aye! though it sleep two thousand years,
Yet all that buried dust shall rise.

Just such a face as greets you now,
Just such a form as here we bear,
Only more glorious far, will rise
To meet the Savior in the air.

Then will I lay me down in peace
When called to leave this vale of tears,
For, "In my flesh shall I see God,"
E'en though I sleep two thousand years.

Arminius and his Sentiments.

HIS VIEWS ON PREDESTINATION.

There were three theories in vogue, adopted by as many different classes of the Calvinistic school. The first regarded as the object of predestination, man to be created; the second, man created, but unfallen; the third, man created and fallen. The first theory was thus enunciated:

1. "That God has absolutely and precisely decreed to save certain particular men by his mercy or grace, but to condemn others by his justice; and to do all this without having any regard to righteousness or sin, obedience or disobedience, which could possibly exist on the part of one class of men or of the other.

2. "That, for the execution of the preceding decree, God determined to create Adam, and all men in him, in an upright state of original righteousness; besides which he also ordained them to commit sin, that they might thus become guilty of eternal condemnation and be deprived of original righteousness.

3. "That those persons whom God has thus positively willed to save, he has decreed not only to salvation, but also to the means which pertain to it; and that he also in reality effects the same by a grace and power that are irresistible, so that it is not possible for them to do otherwise than believe, persevere in faith, and be saved.

4. "That to those whom, by his absolute will, God has fore-ordained to perdition, he has also decreed to deny that grace which is necessary and sufficient for salvation, and does not in reality confer it upon them; so that they are neither placed in a possible condition nor in any capacity of believing or of being saved."

A mere synopsis of the answering argument must suffice. Arminius rejects this kind of predestination for the following reasons:

1. Because it is not the foundation of Christianity. A decree takes the place of Jesus, the atoning Savior.

2. It comprises within it neither the whole nor any part of the gospel. Repentance and faith are quite ignored.

3. This doctrine was never admitted, decreed, or approved in any council, either general or particular, for the first six hundred years after Christ.

4. None of the doctors or divines of the church, who held orthodox sentiments for the first six hundred years after the birth of Christ, ever brought this doctrine forward or gave it their approval.

5. It neither agrees nor corresponds with the Harmony of Confessions, which was published at Geneva, in the name of the Reformed and Protestant churches.

6. It is doubtful whether this doctrine agrees with the Belgic Confession and the Heidelberg Catechism. The former declares: "Man knowingly and willingly subjected himself to sin, and, consequently, to death and cursing, while he lent an ear to the deceiving words and impostures of the devil," etc. Whence it is concluded, that man did not sin on account of any necessity, through a preceeding decree of predestination. The latter asserts: "Salvation through Christ is not given to all them who had perished in Adam, but to those only who are ingrafted into Christ by true faith, and who embrace his benefits." Whence it is inferred, that God has not absolutely predestinated any men to salvation, but that he has in his decree considered them as BELIEVERS.

7. This doctrine is repugnant to the nature of God, but particularly to those attributes of his nature by which he performs and manages all things—his wisdom, justice, and goodness.

8. It is also contrary to the nature of man, in three particulars: (1). Man is declared to be created in the image of God; but the sentiment we oppose amounts to this: "God did undoubtedly create man after his own image, in righteousness and true holiness; but, notwithstanding this, he foreordained and decreed that man should become impure and unrighteous; that is, should be made conformable to the image of Satan." (2). It is inconsistent with the freedom of the will, with which man was endowed at creation. But this doctrine of predestination charges God either with folly, in granting any such freedom; or with mutability, in preventing the use of that liberty originally imparted. (3). This doctrine is prejudicial to man in regard to the inclination and capacity for eternal happiness, with which he was originally endowed.

9. This predestination is diametrically opposed to the act of creation. (1). Creation is a communication of good, according to the intrinsic property of its nature. But creation, with such an intent, is not a communication of good. (2). Reprobation is an act of hatred: But creation does not proceed from hatred: Therefore creation is not a means for the execution of the decree of reprobation. (3). Creation is a perfect act of God, by which he has manifested his wisdom, goodness, and omnipotence. It is not therefore subordinate to another action of God, as that of election, etc.

10. This doctrine is in open hostility to the nature of eternal life, and the titles by which it is distinguished in the Scriptures. But eternal life is held out as "the reward of obedience"—"the recompense of those who fight the good fight of faith," etc. God has not, therefore, elected any man to eternal life, irrespective of faith and obedience.

11. It is also opposed to the nature of eternal death, and those appellations by which it is described in scripture. It is there known as "the wages of sin"—the punishment due to those "who obey not the gospel of Jesus Christ," etc. God has not, therefore, without regard to sin and disobedience, prepared eternal death for any person.

12. This predestination is inconsistent with the nature and properties of sin. (1). Sin is called "disobedience" and "rebellion;" neither of which terms can possibly apply to any person, who, by a preceding divine decree, is placed under an unavoidable necessity of sinning. (2). Sin is the meritorious cause of damnation. Sin, therefore, which is a cause, cannot be placed among the means by which God executes the decree of reprobation.

13. It is likewise repugnant to the nature of divine grace, and tends to destroy it, in three ways: (1). Grace is so attempered to the nature of man as to destroy the freedom of his will, but to give it a right direction; but this doctrine destroys grace, by taking away our moral agency, and hence our manhood. (2). The Scriptures inform us that the grace of God may be received "in vain," and hence they administer a salutary caution; but this doctrine affirms that grace is a certain irresistible operation, and hence tends to carelessness. (3). According to the primary intention of God, grace tends to the good of those to whom it was offered; while this doctrine drags along with it the assertion that grace is offered and so far communicated to its certain reprobates, as to illuminate their understandings and excite within them a taste for the heavenly gifts, only for this end and purpose, that, in proportion to the height to which they are elevated, the abyss into which they are precipitated may be the deeper, and their fall the heavier; and that they may both merit and receive the greater perdition!

14. This doctrine of predestination is injurious to the glory of God: for it makes him the author of sin, as proved by four arguments: (1). Its first position is, that God has absolutely determined to demonstrate his glory by punitive justice and mercy, in the salvation of some and the damnation of others; which could not be done without the introduction of sin. (2). In order to attain this object, God ordained that man should commit sin, from which divine ordination the fall of man necessarily followed. (3). It asserts that God has denied to man, or has withdrawn from him, such a portion of grace as is sufficient and necessary to enable him to avoid sin, and that this was done before man had sinned; which is the same as if God had prescribed a law to man, which it would be utterly impossible for him to obey. (4). It ascribes to God certain operations with regard to man, which being once admitted, man must necessarily commit sin, by that necessity which the school men call "a consequential necessity antecedent to the thing itself," and which totally destroys the freedom of the will.

From these premises we deduce the conclusion, that God really sins. Because, according to this doctrine, he moves man to sin by an act that is irresistible, and according to his own purpose and primary intention. From the same position we might also infer that God is the only sinner. For man, impelled by an irresistible force to perform a prohibited act, cannot be said to sin himself. It also follows that sin is not sin, since whatever God does must be right, and ought not to receive the appellation of sin.

15. This doctrine is highly dishonorable to Jesus Christ, our Savior, for it affirms that men were predestinated to be saved before Christ was predestinated to save them, and thus argues that he is not the foundation of election.

16. It is also hurtful to the salvation of men. (1). There can be no genuine sorrow for sin, unavoidably committed. (2.) Nor any earnest effort for salvation, as the die is cast and destiny unalterably fixed. (3). It represses zeal and restrains good works, since it declares that "the regenerate cannot perform either more or less good than they do." (4). The fear that they are reprobates, often leads persons to despair.

17. This doctrine inverts the order of the gospel. The gospel says, "Fulfill the command, and thou shalt obtain the promise; believe and thou shalt live." But this theory forces God to say, "Since it is my will to give certain persons life, it is therefore my will to give them faith."

18. It is in open hostility to the ministry of the gospel. If God has precisely decreed to save some individuals and to damn others, human instrumentalities are entirely futile. What faith could a minister exercise in praying and laboring for his congregation, while believing that their doctrines have all been pre-arranged by the Almighty?

19. It completely subverts the foundation of religion in general, and of the Christian religion in particular. (1). When God determines absolutely to save certain particular men, without reference to their obedience, he places his love for certain men before his love of righteousness. (2). When God has such a great love for certain sinners, that he wills absolutely to save them—before giving satisfaction, through Jesus Christ, to his love of justice—he makes his love of justice, manifested in Christ, subordinate to his love for sinners; which is to upheave the very foundation of Christianity.

20. This doctrine of predestination has been rejected, both in former times and in our own days, by the greater part of the professors of Christianity.

Thus have we epitomized the great argument of Arminius against the first theory of predestination. He expanded and inculpates the Almighty, by making him the author of sin. From such a blasphemous charge he started back in horror. (To be continued.)

The Jewish Sabbath.

Inasmuch as there are some that are contending that we should keep the seventh day, as the Sabbath given in the law God gave to Moses on Mount Sinai (Ex. 20), we purpose to show that it is not correct, and such teachers have erred from the faith, and are fallen from grace. (Gal. 5: 4.) For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. (Rom. 10: 4.) Now the end of the commandment (or law) is charity out of a pure heart. (1 Tim. 1; 5.) But some have failed to realize this faith and have turned to vain jangling about the law, of which they do not understand themselves. (v. 7.) But we know the law is not made for a righteous man; but for the lawless, for men that are guilty of anything contrary to sound doctrine. (1. Tim. 1: 9, 10.) The law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ; but Christ having now come, and we now being justified by faith in Christ, we are no longer under a schoolmaster. (Gal. 3: 24, 25.) The same trouble arose in the time of the apostles by some brethren that came from the sect of the Pharisees. (Acts 15: 5.) These troubled the brethren, saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law of Moses. (Acts. 15: 24.) Some will say that circumcision only was what they contended for; but take notice, circumcision was not the law of Moses (Gen. 17: 10–14), but was the seal of the Abrahamic covenant. But they contended that they must keep the law of Moses. Now the apostles and elders come together to consider this matter (Acts 15: 6), and their sentence was—We give no such commandment—and this was in regard to the Sabbath, surely; for no one would for a moment think that they would allow the brethren to kill, commit adultery steal, bear false witness, covet a neighbor's wife, etc., that they should be circumcised; nor that they be required to keep the law of Moses. (Acts 15: 19, 24.) For by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified. (Rom. 3: 20.) They that go back to the law put themselves under the curse. (Gal. 3: 10.) Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law. (Gal. 3: 13) But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested. (Rom. 3: 21.) Know ye not brethren (for I speak to them that know the law) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth. (Rom. 7: 1.) For the woman [the Jewish church] which hath a husband is bound by the law to her husband [the law of Moses] so long as he liveth, but if the husband [the law] be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. So then, if while her husband [the law of Moses] liveth she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress. (Rom. 7: 2, 3.) Now the Pharisees had married their own tradition, while their husband was yet alive. (Mat. 15: 9.) Hence, Christ called them an adulterous generation. (Mat. 12: 39.) But if her husband be dead she is free from that law so that she is no adulteress though she be married to another man. Wherefore my brethren ye also are become dead to the law of your former husband [the law of Moses] by the body of Christ. (Rom. 7: 4.) Your former husband having been crucified and nailed to the cross (Col. 2: 14), so that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead. (Rom. 7: 4.) The law had been our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ; but when we come to Christ we are no longer under a schoolmaster. (Gal. 3: 24, 25.) Being led of the Spirit ye are not under the law (Gal. 5: 18), for the law made nothing perfect; but the bringing in of a better hope did. (Heb. 7: 19.) For if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law. (Gal. 3: 21.) Therefore whosoever of you are justified by the law ye are fallen from grace. (Gal. 5: 4.) For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. (Gal. 5: 14.)

Again. Tell me, says Paul, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law? For it is written that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bond maid, the other by a free woman (Gal. 4: 21, 22), which things are an allegory; for this Hagar is Mount Sinai and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. (Gal. 4: 24, 25.) Nevertheless what saith the Scripture? Cast out [Mount Sinai and Jerusalem] the bond woman and her son [or the law and those that are under the law]; for the son of the bond woman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman. (Gal. 4: 30.) So then we are not the children of [the law at Mount Sinai] the bond woman, but of the free woman. (Gal 4: 31.) And if Christ shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed. (John 8: 36.) I would, says Paul, they were even cut off which trouble you. (Gal. 5: 12.)

SAMUEL CRONCE.

PUBLIC acquiescence in immortality is demoralizing. When certain notorious men sit as judges, and certain clever lawyers become the tools of unscrupulous corporations, and serve, for hire, the purpose of contemptible men—and such judges and such lawyers there are in the city of New York—if the public sense of decency does not express in some decisive and forcible manner its abhorrance and disgust, it is a sign of an alarming decay of the public virtue, and a surrender of power to dishonesty, which can end only in some general catastrophe.—George W. Curtis.

SPEAKING of a minister whose sermons contain a little of every thing and not much of any thing;

"His talk is like a stream which runs
With rapid change from rocks to roses;
It slips from politics to puns,
It glides from Mahomet to Moses."

A FREEDMAN'S teacher writes of a colored woman, who, having learned her alphabet, said, "Now I want to learn to spell Jesus; for, 'pears like the rest will come easier if I learn to spell the blessed name first."

Chaldean Story of the Deluge.

From the ding of the tablets giving his histo-Mr. Smith supposes that Izdubar d in the epoch immediately follow-the Flood, and thinks, likewise, he may have been the founder of he Babylonian monarchy, perhaps Nimrod of Scripture. This, how-r is pure conjecture. After show-how it was quite natural that an ly Chaldean document from Erech uld be transported to Ninevah, cop-, and placed in the royal library re, Mr. Smith introduces the story he Flood proper with a short ac-nt of the tablets which precede it, which account for its introduction the narrative. Izdubar, the hero hese legends, flourished soon after Flood, and the center of most of exploits was the city of Erech, now ep Warka, which must have been of the most ancient cities in the rld. Four cities only are mention-in these inscriptions—Babel, Erech, ippak, and Nipur. Two of these bel and Erech, are the first two cap-'s of Nimrod, and the last, Nipur, ording to the Talmud, is the same Calneh, the fourth city of Nimrod. the first five tablets of the history Izdubar, Mr. Smith has not recognized any fragments, but in the mass of material which he has collected it is possible that some portions may belong to this part of the story. Izdubar, having conquered Belesu, put on his crown, wooed and won the Princess Ish tar—the same as Venus—who was queen of beauty, but somewhat inconstant, for she had already a husband, a deity, called the "Son of Life."

In course of time Izdubar fell into some illness and came to fear death, man's last great enemy. Now the the Babylonians believed in the existence of a patriarch named Sisit—the Xisuthrus of the Greeks—who was supposed to have been translated and to have attained to immortality without death. Izdubar, according to the notions of the time, resolved to seek Sisit, to ascertain how he became immortal, that he might attain to a similar honor. Izdubar has a guiding dream, the story of which is unfortunately very mutilated, few fragments of it remaining, and his subsequent journey is not in much better condition. After long wanderings, he falls into company with a seaman named Ur-hamsi, a name similar to the Orchamus of the Greeks. Izdubar and Urhamsi fit out a vessel to continue the search for Sisit, and they sail along for a month and fifteen days, and arrive at some region near the mouth of the Euphrates, where Sisit is supposed to dwell. In this journey by water there are fresh adventures, and, in their course, Urhampsi tells Izdubar of the waters of death, of which he states, "The waters of death thy hands will not cleanse." At the time when Izdubar and Urhampsi are approaching him, Sisit is sleeping. The tablet here is too mutilated to inform us how they came to see each other, but it appears probable from the context that Sisit was seen in company with his wife, a long way off, separated from Izdubar by a stream. Unable to cross this water which divided the mortal from the immortal, Izdubar appears to have called to Sisit and asked his momentous question on life and death. The question asked by Izdubar and the first part of the answer of Sisit are lost by the mutilation of the tablet. The latter part of the speech of Sisit, which is preserved, relates to the danger of death, its universality, etc. It winds up as follows: "The goddess Mamitu the maker of fate to them their fate has appointed, she has fixed death and life, but of death the day is not known." These words, which close the first speech of Sisit, bring us to the end of the tenth tablet; the eleventh opens with a speech of Izdubar, who now asks Sisit how he became immortal, and Sisit, in answering, relates the story of the flood and his own piety as the reason why he was translated. The following is the translation of this—the most important of all the tablets:

Izdubar after this manner said to Sisit afar off
....Sisit
The account do thou tell to me
The account do thou tell to me
....to the midst to make war
....I come up after thee

In the day that I celebrated his festival

The raging of a storm in the morning arose, from the horizon of heaven extending and wide Vul in the midst of it thundered, and Nebo and Saru went in front;
the throne bearers went over mountains and plains
the destroyer Nergal overturned;
Ninip went in front, and cast down;
the spirits carried destruction.
in their glory they swept the earth;

the bright earth to a waste was turned;
the surface of the earth, like....it swept;

the strong tempest over the people, reached to heaven.
Brother saw not his brother, it did not spare the people.
In heaven
The gods feared the tempest, and Sought refuge; they ascended to the heaven of Anu.
The gods like dogs with tails hidden, couched down.
Spake Ishtar a discourse, uttered the great goddess her speech
"The world to sin has turned, and then I in the presence of the gods prophesied evil;
when I prophesied in the presence of the gods evil, to evil were devoted all my people, and I prophesied thus, "I have begotten man and let him not like the sons of the fishes fill the sea.
The gods concerning the spirits, were weeping with her;
the gods in seats, seated in lamentation;
covered were their lips for the coming evil.
Six days and nights passed, the wind tempest and storm, overwhelmed.
on the seventh day in its course, was calmed the storm, and all the tempest which had destroyed like an earthquake, quieted. The sea he caused to dry, and the wind and tempest ended.
I was carried through the sea. The doer of evil, and the whole of mankind who turned to sin,
like reeds their corpses floated.
I opened the window and the light broke in, over my refuge it passed, I sat still and over my refuge came peace.
I was carried over the shore, at the boundary of the sea.
for twelve measures it ascended over the land.
To the country of Nizir, went the ship;
the mountain of Nizir stopped the ship, and to pass over it, it was not able.
The first day and the second day, the mountain of Nizir the same.
The third day and the fourth day, the mountain of Nizir the same.
The fifth and sixth, the mountain of Nizir the same.
On the seventh day in the course of it
I sent forth a dove, and it left. The dove went and searched and a resting place it did not find, and it returned.
I sent forth a swallow, and it left. The swallow went and searched, and a resting place it did not find, and it returned.
I sent forth a raven, and it left.
The raven went, and the corpses on the water it saw, and it did eat, it swam, and wandered away, and did not return.
I sent the animals forth to the four winds. I poured out a libation
I built an altar on the peak of the mountain, by sevens herbs I cut,
at the bottom of them, I placed reeds, pines and simgar.
The gods collected at its burning; the gods collected at its good burning the gods like sumbe over the sacrifice gathered.
From of old also, the great God in his course, the great brightness of Anu had created; when the glory of these gods, as of Ukni stone, on my countenance I could not endure; in these days I prayed that for ever I might not endure.
May the gods come to my altar;
may Bel not come to my altar for he did not consider and had made a tempest and my people he had consigned to the deep from of old, also Bel in his course saw the ship, and went Bel with anger filled to the gods and spirits;
let not any one come out alive, let not a man be saved from the deep.
Ninip his mouth opened and spake, and said to the warrior Bel,
"who then will be saved." Hea the words understood, and Hea knew all things,
Hea his mouth opened and spake, and said to the warrior Bel,
"Thou prince of the gods, warrior, when thou wast angry a tempest thou madest, the doer of sin did his sin, the doer of evil did his evil, may the exalted not be broken, may the captive not be delivered;
instead of thee making a tempest, may lions increase and men be reduced;
instead of thee making a tempest, may leopards increase, and men be reduced;
instead of thee making a tempest, may a famine happen, and the country be destroyed;
instead of thee making a tempest, may pestilence increase, and men be destroyed.
I did not peer into the wisdom of the gods, reverent and attentive a dream they sent, and the wisdom of the gods he heard.
When his judgment was accomplished, Bel went up to the midst of the ship, he took my hand and brought me out, me he brought out, he caused to bring my wife to my side, he purified the country, he established in a covenant and took the people in the presence of Sisit and the people;
when Sisit and his wife and the people to be like the gods were carried away, then dwelt Sisit in a remote place at the mouth of the rivers;
they took me and in a remote place at the mouth of the river they seated me, when to thee whom the gods have chosen, thee and the life which thou hast sought, after thou shalt gain this do for six days and seven nights like I say also, in bonds bind him
the way like a storm shall be laid upon him.
Sisit after this manner, said to his wife
I announce that the chief who grasps at life
the way like a storm shall be laid upon him;
his wife after this manner, said to Sisit afar off, purify him and let the man be sent away
the road that he came, may he return in peace, the great gate open, and may he return to his country.
Sisit after this manner, said to his wife,
the cry of a man alarms thee,
this do, his scarlet cloth place on his head, and the day when he ascended the side of the ship
she did, his scarlet cloth she placed on his head, and the day when he ascended on the side of the ship,

The next four lines describe seven things done to Izdubar before he was purified. The passage is obscure and does not concern the flood, so I have not translated it.

Izdubar after this manner, said to Sisit afar off.
this way, she has done, I come up joyful y, my strength thou givest me.
Sisit after this manner said to Izdubar
....thy scarlet cloth
....I have lodged thee
....

The five following lines, which are mutilated, refer again to the seven matters for purifying Izdubar; this passage, like the former one, I do not translate.

Izdubar after this manner said to Sisit afar off
....Sisit to thee may we not come.

From here the text is much mutilated, and it will be better to give a general account of its contents than to attempt a strict translation, especially as this part is not so interesting as the former part of the tablet. Lines 221 to 223 mention some one who was taken and dwelt with death. Lines 224 to 233 give a speech of Sisit to the seaman Urhamsi, directing him how to cure Izdubar, who, from the broken passages, appears to have been suffering from some form of skin disease. Izdubar was to be dipped in the sea, when beauty was to spread over his skin once more. In lines 236 to 241 the carrying out of these directions and the cure of Izdubar are recorded.

The tablet then reads as follows:

Izdubar and Urhamsi rode in the boat where they placed them they rode his wife after this manner said to Sisit afar off Izdubar goes away, he is satisfied, he performs that which thou hast given him and returns to his country and he heard, and after Izdubar
he went to the shore
Sisit after this manner said to Izdubar
Izdubar thou goest away thou art satisfied, thou performest
That which I have given thee and thou returnest to thy country
I have revealed to thee Izdubar the concealed story

Lines 253 to 262, which are very mutilated, give the conclusion of the speech of Sisit, and then state that, after hearing it, Izdubar took great stones and piled them up as a memorial of these events.

Lines 263 to 289 give in a very mutilated condition subsequent speeches and doings of Izdubar and Urhamsi. In this part journeys are mentioned of 10 and 20 kaspu, or 70 and 140 miles; a lion is spoken of, but there is no further allusion to the flood. These lines close the inscription, and are followed by a colophon which gives the heading of the next tablet, and the statement that this (the Flood tablet) is the 11th tablet in the series giving the History of Izdubar, and that it is a copy of the ancient inscription.

Mr. Smith, before proceeding to examine the bearings of the details of the tablet on our existing records of the Flood, gave an outline of the Mosaic account as contained in Genesis, and cites the text of the Chaldean history as given by Berosus—which assigns Xisuthrus as the name of the builder of the Ark, Cronos as the name of the deity who commanded him to build it, five stadia long and two broad its dimensions, and the land of Armenia as its resting-place. The proper names Mr. Smith considers to be the least satisfactory part of the subject, from the corruption of the Greek forms and the difficulty of reading phonetically the Cuneiform names, mostly written in monogram. The Cuneiform account agrees with the Biblical narrative in making the Deluge a Divine punishment for the wickedness of the world; this account is omitted in the Greek accounts of Berosus. The dimensions of the vessel in the inscription are unfortunately lost by a fracture which has broken off both numbers; the passage, which is otherwise complete, shows that the dimensions were expressed in cubits, as in the Biblical account; but, while Genesis makes the Ark 50 cubits broad and 30 cubits high, the inscription states that the height and breadth were the same. Some details of the launching of the Ark, such as that of leaks being stopped by bitumen, have no parallel either in the Bible or in Berosus; but the description of the Ark generally agrees with the two other accounts—though differing from Genesis in not mentioning the sevens of clean animals, and in including others besides the family of the builder. The date of the Deluge's commencement, given by the Bible and Berosus, is not mentioned in the tablet. With regard to the duration of the Deluge, there appears a serious difference between the Bible and the inscription. According to the account in Genesis, the flood commenced on the seventeenth day of the second month, the Ark rested on Ararat after one hundred and fifty days on the seventeenth day of the seventh month, and the complete drying up of the Flood was not until the twenty-seventh day of the second month in the following year. The inscription, on the other hand, states that the Flood abated on the seventh day, and that the ship remained seven days on the mountain before the sending out of the birds. On this point it must be remarked that some Biblical critics consider that there are two versions of the Flood story in Genesis itself, and that these two differ as to the duration of the Flood. The Greek account of Berosus is silent as to the duration of the Deluge. Pursuing his examination, Mr. Smith finds differences in the accounts as to the mountain on which the Ark rested, and the test of the birds, by which the abatement of the Flood was ascertained; while in the building of the altar and the sacrifice after leaving the Ark, all three accounts agree. On reviewing the evidence, Mr. Smith continued, it is apparent that the events of the Flood narrated in the Bible and the inscription are the same, and occur in the same order; but the minor differences in the details show that the inscription embodies a distinct and independent tradition. In spite of a striking similarity in style, which shows itself in several places, the two narratives belong to two totally distinct peoples. The Biblical account is the version of an inland people, the name of the Ark in Genesis means a chest or box, and not a ship; there is no notice of the sea, or of launching, no pilots are spoken of, no navigation is mentioned. The inscription, on the other hand, belongs to a maritime people, the Ark is called a ship, the ship is launched into the sea, trial is made of it, and it is given in charge of a pilot. He points out circumstances which suggest the question whether the Chaldean narrative itself may not have been compiled from two distinct and older accounts; and notes it as remarkable that the oldest traditions of the early Babylonians seem to center round the Persian Gulf. In conclusion, he remarked that this account of the Deluge opened a new field of inquiry in the early part of the Bible history. The question has often been asked, "What is the origin of the accounts of the antediluvians, with their long lives so many times greater than the longest span of human life? Where was Paradise, the abode of the first parents of mankind? Whence comes the story of the flood, of the Ark, of the birds?" The Cuneiform inscriptions are now shedding new light on these questions, and supplying material which future scholars will have to work out. It would be a mistake to suppose that with the translation and commentary on an inscription like this the matter is ended. Beneath the mounds and ruined cities of Chaldea, now awaiting exploration, lie, together with the older copies of this Deluge text, other legends and histories of the earliest civilization in the world.

"By Flood and Field."

In the days of Dun Scotus and Paracelsus the violent disturbances which now convulse the physical world would no doubt have been regarded as an evil omen, if not as the forerunner of doom itself. Perhaps never before in the history of our planet has the close of the year been marked by such a fierce war of the elements. Tropic cyclones have swept the Atlantic and the European main. The waters of the Baltic and the East Sea have invade and submerged their coasts and adjacent regions. Storms and floods have combined to spread desolation over immense tracts in England, Ireland, France, Germany and Italy. Who shall say when it may not be our turn?

In the face of such catastrophes man stands helpless, and no longer utters his silly boast of having mastered the forces of nature. He may arrest the wild course of the flames; he may adopt precautions against the overflowing of rivers; but when the waters of the mighty deep are lashed by the gale upon the coast, he is impotent. Fortunately these visitations are rare, for there is nothing so terrible, so overwhelming. Storm and wave not only alter the natural conditions of the coast, but the social and economical relations of their inhabitants. No war commits such terrible havoc in the course of years as they will commit in one single hour. War may destroy villages, devastate the fields, rob the agriculturist of his stores, consume his herds, but it neither takes away the soil nor renders fields unproductive for any long period to come. The angry sea, however, does all this. Where yesterday stood smiling villages and towns, the morrow finds little save a mass of stones and rubbish.; the ground is often so rent and torn up that the whole locality ceases to be fit for habitation. Fertile fields, on which one day the fall corp was maturing, are on the next covered with mud, weeds and stones; the vegetation is washed away, and the soil is no longer fit for cultivation. In one place the retreating sea has carried off a piece of land; in another it has deposited sand bars at the mouth of rivers; and again, in a third, where the waves have made their way inland, fields which arduous toil has drained and rendered productve, are once more submerged. The fruits of many years' labor are frequently lost in one day. The winter's stores are gone, and so are also the means wherewith to begin work in the spring. In many instances, no doubt, the the sufferers have reason to be thankful that the loss of their families has not been added to the loss of their worldly possessions.

Catastrophes so widespread and appalling in consequences naturally call for the exercise of the promptest and most active philanthropy. They open a field for the display of that readiness to relieve human distress and want which has justly come to be considered one of the noblest traits of the modern era. The Govenment will, of course, do their share; for the public interests demand that the dams, dikes, sluices, bridges, etc. should be at once restored, and further mischief prevented. But the State cannot well relieve individual cases of suffering; it cannot be expected to rebuild houses, supply beds, furniture, agricultural implements, and other necessaries to those who have lost all. This must be the duty of the benevolent. Where such a terrible calamity befalls a region, the unfortunates must find that their luckier fellow-men sympathize with them. State aid, even were it justified, operates slowly and imperfectly. Private charity will be afforded its widest scope this winter.—Inter Ocean.

Advent Christian Times.

CHICAGO, TUESDAY, December 31, 1872.

ARE you doing anything to aid the publishing cause? It is one of the most important branches of our work.

IT is the time of year for giving presents. Present the TIMES to a friend or neighbor for a year. It may be the means of his enlightenment and conversion.

THE Union Advocate, in a tone of deep sorrow, says: "The Universalist sect is quiet, but Universalist doctrines are permeating every nerve and tissue of the ecclesiastical body."

DR. DOLLINGER admits, without hesitation, that the original baptism of the church was immersion, and says that "the disuse of immersion in baptism" was one of the instances in which "many of the Roman rites began to vary more and more from the Eastern form.'

SOME have expressed a doubt whether Spurgeon ever uttered the oft-quoted passage ascribed so him containing the allusion to the 'twin bells.' It may be found in the authorized American edition of his sermons, 'Second Series,' published by Sheldon & Co. New York, 1860, at p. 275, in the sermon upon the resurrection of the dead.

A SUBSCRIBER who writes to tell us he does not get his paper once in a month, fails utterly to give his P. O. address. How can we help him? Perhaps a defect of this kind, and imperfect direction, is the cause of his trouble.

Wont our friends try to remember to give their P. O. addresses in full in every letter? Please do so!

THE Herald of Life throws down the gage for a bit of discussion upon the question—'What is the use of raising the wicked dead?' There are a large number of facts in both nature and revelation the philosophy of which we have never seen satisfactorily explained. From a certain standpoint the non-resurrection theory is plausible enough, but in the light of revelation it is unscriptural. The best we can say for the theory is, it is better than the system which insists upon eternal torments for the lost.

'THE mother is very short in her temper, shows great intelligence, cunning and watchfulness.' So says an English writer of the Hippopotamus in the Zoological Gardens at London. As we read, we found ourselves asking—Is temper a property of matter? Can matter show 'great intelligence?' Is cunning something inherent in material substances? We would like to know. When man is mentioned as having intelligence, etc., we are assured that he must have an immaterial soul, because matter cannot think—thought is not a property of matter at all. Well, here is the hippopotamus, possessed of temper, cunning and intelligence. These are immaterial qualities. Ergo. The hippopotamus has an immaterial and therefore immortal substance included within its being. If not, why not?

As we read the following incident we could but think it beautifully illustrated a not infrequent chapter in Christian experience. The storms may rage long and fiercely; but God sets his rainbow in the cloud with sufficient frequency to renew our faith by reminding us that his promises are sealed and sure. Let us not hesitate before the most unpleasant or difficult duties. Do as God says. If the billows threaten, and the winds rave, prepare to do his will; and as the bow in the cloud to the sailor, so will he give you testimony of his presence to sustain and bless the willing and obedient soul. But here is the anecdote:

When the Baltic on a recent passage home bore down upon the wreck where the poor sailors were lashed to the rigging, there was a heavy sea and a murky sky. Volunteers were called for to man the boats to enter upon a most perilous undertaking. Men were not wanting, and a boat which appeared like a mere cockle shell was launched and pushed off. At this moment, as if heaven bestowed its benison upon the brave tars, the clouds lifted and a gorgeous rainbow sprung its arch across the firmament. It continued only for a brief space of time, and when the rescued seamen were on board the staunch steamer, the storm which had been raging previously renewed its reign.

PRESENT TRUTH.

This is the title of a tract on chronological prophecy, by Br. Jonas Wendell. A quantity of them have been placed in our hands for free distribution to those who will pay the postage on them, which will be one cent a copy. The tract is well written, and the arguments deserve candid attention. Send your orders to this office.

A MUDDY EXPLANATION.

The National series of Sunday School questions lately led into the Book of Daniel. We have observed with some interest the expositions of the prophecy presented in the Sunday School departments of one of our exchanges. The teacher of the lesson in the Christian Era opens his remarks upon Dan. ch. 12, with an objurgation of those who refer this prophecy to the second advent. Then follows a strained effort to apply it to Antiochus, Epiphanes, the Maccabees and the events of their time. 'A time of trouble such as never was' does not mean that, but means a severe persecution—something quite 'dreadful,' yet by no means such a trouble 'as never was.' Then 1290 days mean 1279! and we are treated to Mr. Cowles' version of what the angel meant by his 'explanation' To our mind the explanation is not made clearer by being explained. Finally we are told:

It is painful to consider how this prophecy of Daniel has suffered at the hands of its professed friends for the last thirty years. Ever since Miller first set forth on his prophetical tournament these numbers of Daniel have served all times and all purposes, and all kinds of men, the more ignorant, the bolder and more confident, their interpretations. One can but hope the time will soon come when what is called "the-day-for-a-year theory" will be abandoned, and then will cease the sorrowful lapse of many into infidelity on account of the failure of the Lord to appear according to their mathematics.

It is painful to see men set up for teachers who are so contemptibly unfair in reasoning. Talk about the year-day theory making infidels! Why! the system this teacher has adopted is a child of skepticism—the German neologian view, grafted upon the American church principally by the efforts of Moses Stuart, who saw no other way to meet Mr. Miller's reasoning.

This writer explains the passage—'Many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased,' by saying: "This may refer to the extensive (!) diffusion of religious truth by the Hebrews before the [first] coming of Christ." Well, what next.

A SPECIAL CASE.

It is well known, or should be, that we do not approve of throwing every case of poverty or suffering among us upon the generosity of the body at large, for the reason that the course is neither just nor politic. But there are special cases of want which it is only just that the public should understand. An instance of this kind is referred to in the following appeal to Br. Sheldon. We heartily endorse it. Br. Thomson is well known among us as a worker and author. Let those especially (and they are many) who have enjoyed his preaching by pen or word of mouth, now testify their appreciation of his services by timely aid. Read and act:

Recently I paid a visit to Br. Thomson, at Arena, Wis., to learn his true condition and his circumstances. I find him in a worse condition than I expected. His rheumatic trouble has totally disabled him. He cannot even feed himself—cannot stand on his feet—has had watchers every night for nearly five months. He is needy, and we must help him.

Let our Wisconsin friends all lend a helping hand without delay. We ought to raise $100 to help him through this cold winter. As fire is kept night and day, and house rent has to be paid, and a family of seven children recently made motherless to be supported, it is not right for us to let all this expense come on the few [illegible] living in Arena, and we must [illegible] it. They have recently been straining every nerve to build a house of worship. Up to the present time, however, they have done nobly in administering to the necessities of Br. Thomson; but the time has come for us to help. Do not delay. Send at once. Direct to Eld. George Thomson, Arena, Wis. Let some one in each church collect a sum from the friends, and send on. Place yourself in Br. Thomson's condition, in imagination, and then act—treat him as you would like to be treated under similar circumstances. If any outside of Wisconsin wish to help, it will not be refused; but we appeal to Wisconsin brethren.

WM. SHELDON.

SONS—SERVANTS.

Not long since we listened to a discourse in which it was taught that under the law God's people might justly be termed servants, but now, under the gospel, the dispensation of the Spirit was ushered in, and we having received the Spirit have thereby become sons of God; and the exhortation to refrain from speaking of ourselves as servants of God was quite fervidly put. Why should a son degrade himself to the place of a servant?

Now the at all careful reader will see that the Bible shows the relations of the people of God to their Divine Father in a variety of illustrations. And while it is true that sonship illustrates one of the relations in which we stand to God, and while we are actually his sons by adoption, this by no means shuts out every other relation. Jesus calls his disciples servants, brethren and friends; and the title of servant of Jesus Christ or of God seems to have been one highly valued by the apostles, whatever any may think of it in this day. Paul opens his epistle to the Romans, the same one from which a rebuke was framed for any who call themselves "servants" of the Lord, by saying, "Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ"—literally the bond-servant or bond-men of Jesus Christ. And although in Gal. 4:7 he says believers are no more servants but sons, yet he makes it clear that this release is from the yoke of the law of Moses; for in ch. 1:10 he claims the position of "a servant of Christ" as a post of honor. James, Peter and Jude all glory in being servants of God and of Jesus Christ; and John in opening the pages of the Apocalypse in his preface says that Jesus sent his angel and declared the matter "to his servant."

Let us not for the sake of a theory push to an extreme any of the various relationships to which God has exalted us. If any rejoice in the proud position of sons of the Lord Almighty, let them not chide their brethren who glory in the privilege of being numbered with the apostles as servants of God and Jesus Christ. If we would have perfection, all the various relationships—servants, friends, sons—must be combined. And because one speaks of himself as a servant, let it not be supposed that he is without the enjoyment of the confidence accorded "a friend," or the assurance of faith and hope belonging to a "son" and "heir."

HADES AND HEAVEN.

[Second Article.]

If, now, the advocates of these theories should say to the writer, Since you claim that we have overthrown each other's position concerning the state of the dead, perhaps you will oblige us by stating the true doctrine, he would reply: The true doctrine is that of the Bible, which plainly teaches that the dead are asleep; (1 Cor. 11:30; 15:6, 18, 51; 1 Thes. 4:13, 14, 15; 5:10; Ps. 13:3; 17:15; Is. 26:19;. Dan. 12:2.) that they praise not the Lord; (Ps. 115:17:) that they are in the land of forgetfulness;" (Ps. 88:12.) that they cannot hope for God's truth; (Is. 38:18.) that "they know not anything." (Eccl. 9:5.)

This theory is expressed in the language of Scripture, and therefore the burden of disproof lies with the party objecting thereto. Neither of the other theories is expressed in Scriptural terms. Where in the Bible can we find the doctrine stated that the righteous when they die go to heaven, or to a paradise in hades? Where in that sacred book are we told that when a wicked man dies his soul is seized by wicked angels and carried to hell, there to be tormented forever? Where is the divine authority for saying that the human soul is immaterial, or immortal, or that is either judged or rewarded or punished separate from the body? Where in the Holy Scriptures is it written that "the sainted dead are already before the throne and serve God day and night in his temple?" Can there be found in the whole Bible a single passage that teaches, either directly or indirectly, by express assertion or fair implication, the incredible and truly intolerable doctrine, that all the wicked dead are at the present time tormented by wicked angels in some fearful abode of endless and ever-increasing misery?

The lovers of Bible truth have a right to demand that these questions be answered. I know very well the passages of Scripture that the radicals and conservatives cite as proof of their respective theories; and I know too that not one of them has the slightest relevance to the subject under discussion. The question is, What is the present state or condition of the dead? What do the Scriptures teach concerning it? Neither party has a right to begin the investigation of this question by assuming as true any disputed doctrine whatever. Let it be understood, then, that neither party has the right to assume that man is mortal or immortal, that the dead are conscious or unconscious. To do this would be equivalent to begging the question at the outset. Let the appeal, then, be made to those passages of Scripture in which the state of the dead is made the subject of comment or remark.

The testimony of Job concerning the intermediate state is very explicit. In the fourteenth chapter of this wonderful poem he declares that—

"Man dieth and wasteth away;
Yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?
As the waters fall from the sea,
And the flood decayeth and drieth up:
So man lieth down, and riseth not:
Till the heavens be no more,
They shall not awake,
Nor be raised out of their sleep."

No comment could add force or clearness to this impressive passage of Scripture, in which it is expressly asserted that the dead are asleep and unable to awake therefrom until "the heavens be no more." Two other passages may, however, be appropriately quoted in this connection. In the closing chapter of Daniel's prophecy it is written: "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Will it be said that this refers only to the state of dead bodies since the soul never sleeps? What then is meant by Isaiah's declaration—"Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust!" (Is. 26:19).

If it be true that the righteous go directly to heaven at death, or even to a paradise in hades, it is passing strange that not one of the inspired writers has ever mentioned the fact, either as an incentive to virtue, or as a consolation to surviving friends and relatives. Throughout the New Testament the interval between this life and the next, between this world and the world to come, is passed over as if it were nothing. Our Lord never speaks of a 'spirit world,' and never promised a reward to any until his second advent. In reasoning with the Sadducees concerning the resurrection, he speaks of "the children of this world," and of them "which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world," but says not a word about any world between death and resurrection. To one who had invited him to eat bread on the Sabbath, he said: "When thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed AT THE RESURRECTION OF THE JUST." (Luke 14:13, 14). If either of the orthodox theories were true, why did not the Great Teacher say, 'Thou shalt be recompensed at death?" This would have settled the whole question at once. His words however as given by Luke, ought to decide the disputed point with all who believe the Bible, that the righteous are not recompensed until the resurrection of the just.

When Paul would administer consolation to the mourning ones at Thessalonica, he was not permitted "by the word of the Lord" to assure them that their deceased brethren were at that very moment partaking of the joys of heaven or paradise, and "Drinking fresh draughts of endless pleasure in."

He was not permitted to sing with Dr. Watts—

"Why do we mourn departing friends,
Or shake at death's alarms?
'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends
To call them to his arms."

Nor to indulge in the sentiment of Montgomery, who asks:

"Why mourn the pious dead?
Why sorrows swell our eyes?
In heaven the ransomed soul is seen."

It was permitted him, however, and that too by divine authority, to address to his bereaved brethren words which cheered their saddened hearts, and which have ever since been the source of comfort and consolation to millions of mourners in every Christian land. He begins by saying that he would not have them ignorant "concerning them which sleep," "For," said he, "if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent [go before] them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words." (Thes. 4:14–18.)

Neither of the orthodox theories can be made to harmonize with the plain utterances of this most perspicuous passage. There are three points of marked contrast which should be carefully noted:

1. The apostle describes the dead as "them which are asleep." Orthodoxy represents them as wide awake.

2. The apostle represents the Lord as coming from heaven to receive all his saints both living and dead. Orthodoxy represents the saints as going one by one to the Lord in heaven.

3. Paul says: "The dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain [unto the coming of the Lord] shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Orthodoxy says: 'The sainted dead are already before the throne, and serve God day and night in his temple.' (Bible Doc. of Im. p. 35.)

Paul passes without remark over the intermediate state, and fixes all his hopes upon the second coming of Christ to raise the dead. In his first letter to the Corinthians he teaches the same doctrines in these words: "If the dead rise not,....then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." ...."What advantageth it me if the dead rise not? let us eat and drink: for to-morrow we die," (1 Cor. 15:18, 32.) Here the doctrine is plainly taught, that without a resurrection there can be no future life for the dead. But this cannot be true in any sense, if the righteous at death are admitted into the joys of heaven or paradise. For in such a case it is evident that it would matter quite as much how we passed the time of our probation here, as though we had to attain future life.

through a resurrection from the dead. The statements of the apostle and the theories of orthodox Protestants are thus seen to be irreconcilable. The doctrine of the sleep of the dead rests upon the firm foundation of the gospel. (To be continued.)

"The Glorious Hope."

Beloved Brethren:

For mutual encouragement and comfort amidst the sorrows and afflictions of our pilgrimage, permit us to address you, in this annual epistle, on the subject of our Second Adoption.

The sufferings of God's people led Paul, in the eighth chapter of Romans, to contrast the state of a Christian while a mortal subjected to the frailties and sufferings of this life and the corruptions of the grave, and the same Christian after he shall have become immortal, liberated from these evils, and resplendent with the glory of the Sons of God. "For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the Sons of God. We ourselves groan within ourselves waiting for the adoption, to-wit., the redemption of our bodies."

God, in the work of redemption, begins it upon the soul and ends it upon the body. He first changes our minds into the image of him who created us. By this there is imparted to us a moral character like that of our Creator and Redeemer. We love holiness and hate sin, loathe the corruptions of our nature, and long after perfection in righteousness. It is in connection with this we receive our first adoption; but while we wonder at and admire the change wrought on the mind, we are still left to sigh about the flesh on account of its enervating and contaminating influences against the spirit. Its carnal desires, its evil working, and its frail and dying state remain, so that "we groan within ourselves and wait for our adoption, to-wit., the redemption of our bodies." This is the second adoption. When received then shall we be like Christ, not only in spirit but in body.

That God designs to confer upon believers this second adoption—in other words, that he designs to change greatly and wonderfully their bodies, is clearly a matter of divine revelation. "Behold," said the inspired aposle, "I show you a mystery: we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. We look for the Savior. the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Then, as "we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." It was this which, by the vision of the Almighty, animated Job when he said, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that I shall stand in the latter day upon the earth, and though after my skin worms devour this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold and not another, though my reins be consumed within me." From these and many other like passages, we have presented to the eye of faith a vision of the work of grace completed, of redemption perfected. It is a vision truly glorious, though we see it yet but in part: for in its fulness it is so incomprehensible that "it doth not yet appear what we shall be." The vision we conceive of its glory is like a bright moonlight view the traveler catches of a splendid mansion, through the thick foliage of the trees that surround it. Now his eye lights upon a pillar, a cornice, a window, a corner and from these, his imagination endeavors to give form and beauty to the entire structure. So it is with that glorious body after which the saints are longing, and an indefinite view of which is presented in such passages as we have quoted.

But it is not by the paintings of the imagination merely that God has left us to ascertain what will be the appearance of our glorious bodies. He has given us a pattern in the glorious body of our Lord Jesus Christ. This was submitted to the inspection of eye-witnesses on the holy mount of transfiguration. The Scriptures teach us that that wonderful scene was designed as a kind of miniature representation of the second advent of our blessed Savior. Certain of the apostles were promised by our Lord that before they died they should see this representation. "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works. Verily I say unto you, there be some standing here who shall not taste of death till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom." All those disciples are long since dead, and there has not been yet any coming of Christ with his angels, when he rewarded every man according to his works.

Jesus presented this promise to those disciples in a metaphor. Metaphors are often employed thus by the sacred writers. Take the following as specimens: "The three branches are three days," i. e., represent three days. "The seven empty ears, blasted by the east wind, shall be seven years of famine." Ephraim is a cake unturned. All flesh is grass. Take, eat, this is my body—this cup is my blood. I am the vine, and my Father is the husbandman. The tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity. Whoso hateth his brother is a murderer. The seven stars are the seven angels of the seven churches; and the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches. So the text, "Verily I say unto you, there be some standing here who shall not taste of death till they see (a representation of) the Son of Man coming in his kingdom." After six days, that representation was given them in the transfiguration of their Lord.

Peter was one of the favored three who was permitted to be an eye-witness of his majesty on that memorable occasion, and he has taught us, in his second epistle, that it was a representation of that glorious advent of Christ which is joyfully anticipated by all truly evangelical Christians. He assured his brethren that the account, which it appears he had often given them, of the splendid and awful exhibition of Christ's transfiguration, was entirely unlike the incredible, fabulous stories the heathen had invented and published concerning their gods—stories the accuracy of which no one could vouch—but, said he, we were eye-witnesses. "We have not followed cunningly devised fables when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father glory and honor, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven, we heard when we were with him in the holy mount." Peter is particular in defining the time and the place of this marvelous exhibition; and applies to it the same metaphorical name that was given it by the Savior, "the coming of our Lord;" that is, a representation of his coming. By the transfiguration, then, Jesus meant to show us the splendor of the retinue that will accompany him when he comes to judge the world, the glory of the Shechinah which will envelop them, and the glorious body in which he will appear in that dreadful day. Moses and Elijah, one on his right hand and the other on his left, represented the escort of angels that will attend him down the skies—the bright cloud that overshadowed them, the awfully terrific Shechinah, which will then look like "flaming fire," and his transfigured body, his glorious body, in which he will then appear when every eye shall see him, and they also that pierced him. The appearance of his body is that with which we are chiefly concerned, in the subject upon which we now address you.

As to the glorious body he exhibited to Peter, James, and John, on the holy mount, the Evangelists say, "The fashion of his countenance was altered, his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow, so as no fuller on earth can white them; his raiment was white and glistering, white as the light." John was one who saw the transfiguration, and speaks of it in his gospel. "And we beheld his glory, (said he,) the glory as of the only begotten of the Father." In the book of Revelations, an account is given of Christ again appearing in his glorious body to this beloved disciple on the island of Patmos, and he has described him as looking very much as he did in the transfiguration. "He was clothed with a garment down to his feet, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. His head and his hair was like wool as white as snow, and his eyes were as a flame of fire, and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength." What surpassing glory! When the sun shineth in his strength, no man can look upon it for a moment. And his raiment was white as the light? From the crown of his head to the soles of his feet, nought appears but the most effulgent glory. The liveliest imagination fails in attempting to delineate this splendor. The brightest objects in nature are employed to paint its glory; but even these are regarded by an eye-witness as altogether inadequate. Soaring above the sun, he says, the glory of Christ, when he saw it, was "as the glory of the only begotten of the Father;" and in another passage he says, when Christ appears, "we shall be like him;" but nothwithstanding he had been exhibited as clothed with the sun, and glistering in white, still he declares, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be," so far are these illustrations from exhibiting the splendor of his future glory.

And yet, amazing thought! Beloved this is the glory with which our bodies will be invested when the work of our redemption shall be consummated in the day of our next adoption! "For when he who is our life shall appear, then shall we appear with him in glory. We know that when he shall appear we shall be like him. He shall change our vile body, and fashion it like unto his glorious body. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." O wondrous prospect! Matchless grace! Blessed hope! Yes, we are "looking for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of the great God, even our Savior Jesus Christ!" when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day. "We groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to-wit, the redemption of our body."

The apostles in their oral, as well as in their written communications, often referred to this edifying subject for the support and comfort of their brethren. Peter says, "I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them; yea, I think it meet as long as I am in this tabernacle to stir you up by putting you in remembrance." Said Paul, "remember ye not that when I was with you, I told you these things?" The apostles had not seen our Lord in his glory, and as they had learned by revelations that he purposed to invest the bodies of all his faithful disciples with the same glory, how could they refrain from speaking of it to their afflicted brethren, to cheer and support them amidst their cruel persecutions. By it they themselves were greatly animated, and they often spake of it to support and animate their suffering brethren. Whenever they refer to "this blessed hope," with what expressions of delight and rapture do they speak of it! Paul compares it to sowing seed, and says, "Thou sowest not that body that shall be"—its future verdure, and blossoms, and fragrance are not yet seen, but "as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." When Daniel in vision saw the redeemed arrayed in their glory, he exclaimed, "They shall shine as the stars, forever and ever." The Savior's description of it was still more clear and splendid. "Then," said he, "shall the righteous shine forth as the sun, in the kingdom of their Father." John, the beloved disciple, despairs of giving a full and adequate idea of the glory in which the saints will be at last invested, and breaks forth in the following exclamation: "Beloved, it doth not appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him." The Psalmist exulted when he saw it afar off, and said, "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness." The apostles were so overcome when they saw Christ's glorious body on the holy mount, that they fell on their faces! O, what a scene will be presented to our astonished vision when we shall not only see him as he is, but see all the blood-washed throng arrayed in the same glory!

"Arrayed in glorious grace,
Shall these vile bodies shine;
And every shape, and every face,
Look heavenly and divine."

Cleansed from all sin, their souls adorned with grace, and their bodies bearing the image of the heavenly, they are all loveliness and holiness within, all beauteous and comely, and glorious without. If at the Savior's first advent, when he changed his glory for ignominy, the angels shouted glory to God in the highest, what will they say when they escort him down the skies in his second advent, "to be glorified in his saints;"—to receive the bride the Lamb's wife? If there was joy among the angels in heaven over one sinner that repented, how will they feel when they see the whole company of the redeemed, cleansed from sin, clothed in white, and dazzling in glory like their Lord! What a coronation day will that be, when the Captain of their salvation shall walk with them in white through the streets of the New Jerusalem, paved with gold, transparent as glass! What music will be made when the General Assembly, and Church of the First Born shall be arranged on the sea of glass, having the harps of God, harping with their harps, and singing as it were, a new song before the Throne! while they outshine the angels in the kingdom of their Father.

And beloved, if we be Christ's, such are our prospects, such the blessedness of our hopes!

"There we shall see his face,
And never, never sin;
There from the rivers of his grace,
Drink endless pleasures in.

"Yes, and before we rise
To that immortal state,
The thoughts of such amazing bliss,
Should constant joy create."

In view of such a prospect, how the disciple wasting away with disease, and sinking into the grave; or the poor saint, pining in want, and clothed in rags, or groaning under persecutions, should exult with joyful triumph. What consolation should the bereaved derive from this subject, when they resign to dust the remains of beloved friends! What solemn admonition does it give the unconverted, whose bodies, in that dread day, will "come forth with shame and everlasting contempt," when they will see the righteous shining forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father!—Circular Letter of the New York Baptist Association, 1843.

Protracted Meeting.

We shall commence a series of meetings in the Advent Mission Hall, 619 W. Lake St., on Monday evening, January 6, with a view to devote the first week as a week of prayer (evenings); after that a discourse every evening, and the meetings to continue as long as may be thought best.

The fulfillment of prophecy, signs of the times, evidences of the coming of our Lord, and other truths will be discussed.

It is well known that we have hired a large hall in Chicago, at our own expense, and have commenced a mission work. This hall, known for years as a dancing academy, is now dedicated to the service of the living and true God.

We feel the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, that we have a work to perform from which we cannot be excused. And now in the commencement of that work we would not forget to ask the prayers of all who love God that success may crown our efforts.

In our new enterprise we have no salary, and therefore cannot offer the inducements for our preaching brethren to call upon us which we would like to do. But this much we can and do say: Let none of our preaching brethren who have a Gospel sermon to deliver, pass through the city without first giving us timely notice, that we may open a door for them. Our place of worship is 619 W. Lake St., and will be known in the future as the Advent Mission Hall. We shall have protracted meetings at different times during the coming year as necessity may demand. We hope to keep humble and unspotted from the world that the Lord may work through us to will and to do of his good pleasure.

We again ask will you make our protracted effort a subject of prayer?

We live in apartments adjoining our hall. The Randolph St. horse cars run by the door.

The Times.

AT HOME.

.... At Ironton O., two men were boiled to death by steam accidentally turned into a boiler they were cleaning.

.... Disasters on the lakes and the St. Lawrence have caused a loss this year of nearly $3,250,000, one-third of which, $1,085,000, occurred in the month of November. The number of vessels destroyed is 100.

.... In Utah heavy snows have been succeeded by immense avalanches, one of which swept eight or ten teams and their drivers a distance of 1,500 feet, burying them alive in the snow.

.... An ice gorge in the Mississippi just above Memphis broke and swept away six steamers lying at Memphis, besides a fleet of coal barges, leaving that city almost as short of coal as Buffalo had been of water. The rise in the price of fuel has been a great hardship to the poor.

.... At a Christmas service in Williamsport, Penn., the floor and ceiling gave way, precipitating 300 persons into the cellar below. Fourteen were killed outright, and three times as many were injured more or less seriously. The ruins took fire, threatening another holocaust. Providentially the flames were speedily extinguished, the threatened sacrifice prevented.

.... At Buffalo, N. Y., for several days last week the inhabitants suffered a water famine; the strong north-east winds having driven the waters of Niagara River back into Lake Erie until the supply pipes for the city works were entirely above the level of the river. The hearts of the inhabitants failed for fear, lest fire should break out in their midst and consume the whole city.

.... The whole country has been visited with the coldest weather known for many years, protracted for many days. Succeeding this came a violent and heavy snow storm, which prevailed from the Atlantic to the "far West." At New York all business was suspended, the snow being three feet deep in some of the streets. The railways, horse and steam, were blockaded, and thousands were compelled to pass the night in their offices and stores because they could not reach their homes in the suburbs of up-town. A similar state of things existed in Boston. Some perished from exposure.

.... Among the numerous calamities by fire we notice the destruction of Barnum's Museum, in New York, in which hundreds of rare animals, birds, and serpents were burned alive. The aggregate loss by this fire was a round million. Mr. Talmadge's celebrated iron chapel—an iron shell upon a wooden frame—was consumed on Sunday-a-week, with most of its contents. This was apparently a punishment for the sin of false construction—the fire taking from a carelessly constructed flue. Other fires have succeeded until the idea of a conspiracy to burn the whole city has gained some credit. At a fire in Center street, seven persons were buried in the ruins, and were left for five days before any attempt was made to recover their remains, because the city officials could not discover which of them should do the work. The friends of the dead girls and boy tearfully begged for the remains that they might bestow upon them a decent burial, but "red tape" officials would neither take steps for their recovery or allow others to do so. But we have not space to tell a tenth of the story of the fires of the last ten days, though we notice in passing, how the burning of a Boston hospital turned some 300 sick persons out upon the community for care and shelter—a peculiarly sad case, as they were suffering in all stages of the small pox.

.... Of the Wall Street gamblers—some of whom build theological seminaries, and all of whom hold their heads so high in society—the New York Mail truthfully says: "The heaviest operators, the men whose success allures and demoralizes the lesser gamblers, those who give tone to the street—are notorious for their repeated violation of the first principles of common honesty. Their corners—which invariably ruin or sadly cripple hundreds of innocent men—are brought about by a combination of fraud and force which unites all the worst elements of highway robbery and getting money under false pretenses. In their dealings with one another they are not ashamed to be guilty of breaches of faith such as the lowest grade of our thieves would not perpetrate."

.... The year seems hastening to fill its cup to overflowing with crime and disaster by land and by sea. Since our last issue the most notable event of the black record is the railway disaster at Goose Creek, on the Corry and Pittsburgh railroad. This new chapter of horrors seems to have dreadfully surpassed the story of the "Carr's Rock" disaster. Two cars were thrown, or rather they leaped from the track on a trestle work, some thirty feet in hight. The wreck immediately took fire. The passengers were mostly confined helplessly within the mass of wood and iron work, with no power to escape the flames which were leaping to devour them. How many of the some thirty souls thus cruelly slain were killed by the fall will never be known. But enough remained alive to fill the air with shrieks of agony as they were swiftly enveloped by the scorching heat. The heat was so intense as to drive away those who sought to liberate the sufferers. We will not dwell upon the details of the soul harrowing tale. When the "unquenchable" fire had consumed all that could afford it food, then the work of gathering the dead from their funeral pyre commenced. Many were burned to crisp coals; others were partially consumed. The heart sickens, and we turn away from such scenes of human misery. But in what direction shall we look for relief. A storm of suffering seems to be pelting the world.

Correspondence.

From Our English Correspondent.

THE RESURRECTION AT HAND.

Where do we stand? Surely it is with one foot on land, and the other uplifted to march over into Canaan. The Papal apostacy spoke its largest words, and then the "city" fell.—Babylon the great! the wicked, the ignoble, the murderous, lost the sceptre of its last and diminished kingdom. Rome fell into the hands of the Sardinian and his army, and was entered by the destroying angel of divine choice. The Pope's sovereignty became nil. The secular power fell from the ecclesiastic hand. This fulfilled the prophecy—the fore-written doom—history: "Babylon the Great is fallen, is fallen!"

Then I see in the history of Revelation ten horns give their power to the beast, and these together with the beast, goad, pierce and tear the woman, after having accomplished the work of throwing her so that she falls. Horns mean powers; or as the angel says, kings. These ten horns are the ten divisions of Italy, who by an overwhelming vote—almost unanimous—gave their power to Victor Emanuel, and who with him have been "burning," or, literally, destroying the church, and "taking away his dominion to consume and destroy it unto the end."

Then God utters his voice from heaven to the remnant he has reserved for himself in the apostacy: "Come out of her my people that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not her plagues; for her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities;" and obedient to this voice, thousands of "old Catholics" have "come out of her."

But during this time she says: "I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." I have read many Catholic papers, but never did I mark so much boastfulness as now. The sovereign Pontiff, the supremacy of St. Peter, the eternal city, the indestructibility of the Romish church—all, all are paraded and marshalled to fulfill the words before written through the Spirit.

Yet her sorrows come. They grow and increase within and around her. And next we see those who have traded with the "city," that is the church, and who have "lived deliciously" with her, crying on account of her sorrow, because she is being "utterly burned with fire." Brethren, the thing is at hand; for the time is fulfilled. This coming season, according to a movement now being made, the noble-born and affluent Catholics (answering to the noble characters of the Revelation) are agreeing together to abstain from pleasure and mourn for the "distressed church, and its head," the Pope.

But this judgment is to be brief. Though severe, it will be short; for a "short work will God make upon the earth.". "He will cut short his work in justice," or righteousness. Thus the prophecy says her plagues shall come in one day"; "for in one hour is thy judgments come"; "for in one hour is, so, great riches is come to naught"; "in one hour she is made desolate." All of which must mean a very limited time.

Then the martyrs who dwell in dust—the martyrs who have fallen beneath the persecutions of Rome—are called up by our Jehovah Jesus, to sing over the downfall of the tyrannical system which hailed them to the death. This is certainly the resurrection of the just; and is synchronous with the parousia of our Lord.

Then, at his appearing, that power which has been consuming by the "spirit of his mouth" is "destroyed by the brightness of his coming." Thus the city, Babylon the Great, not only falls, but sinks as a mighty mill-stone under divine displeasure; the Almighty hand sweeps away the last vestige of the "kingdom of men," and sets in its place "the kingdom of God," our glorious, loving Jesus being King in that day. Then shall we, his beloved, rest in his rest, and sing in his joy; for we shall enter into the joy of our Lord.

Thus then the end is at hand. The "mourning" will take place this coming season. And the time of the judgment of the woman is momentary. Then amid the weeping I hear the singing of the redeemed. 'Tis the sound of "Allelua"! and we shall be invited to join the choir and the chorus.

So let us be up and doing; awake and watching; praying and singing. And for a pressing effort to bring men to God by the way of the cross; and let us give them through God the crown in hope; that they with us may be so gloriously, unspeakably happy as to be saved in that day.

THE FIRE IN BOSTON

has swept away nearly all I own in this world. About $1,500 worth of stock and debts entrusted to me have perished, but I am spared, and mine. I should sorrow more than I do, only that I have in heaven a better and more enduring substance. Explosions cannot shiver that; fire cannot burn it; flames cannot lick it up. It is there—safely there; beyond the flame and the conflagration. Thank God! I know near the year of jubilee property was less valuable than in the first year afterwards. In the first year it seemed to have some real worth; but in the last it depreciated almost to nothing—it was hardly worth the trouble of transferance [illegible] though I miss the treasure which [illegible], and feel crippled in carrying out my intention to tell the world of the near approach of Jesus, I confess property in itself seems to me to have the most uncertain, yes only seeming value. The only thing that troubles me is that I owe some money which I should like to be able to pay, for I wish all accounts square when our Lord comes. O beloved, the Lord is at hand. Doubt not. Be not wavering in your minds on this point. The Spirit is saying, "Be coming." And the Lord is replying, "I am coming quickly." O my heart, be thou always united to that desire, which when it cometh shall be as a tree of life to the soul, and shall ever and abundantly satisfy.

BRETHREN IN ENGLAND.

Though sundered by a mighty ocean, our hearts are bound so closely together in the bundle of life, and we are united so blessedly by the girdle of charity in the name of Jesus, that we love to hear of each other. Thus I I am thinking: May be my brethren in America would like to be introduced to some of the champions of truth in England, brethren "holy and beloved," who, at the risk of reputation, the sacrifice of friendship, the loss of emoluments, the ban of excommunication, and the isolation of exclusion, have dared to take sides for the truth's love, with the Christ and the gospel. Let me then make you acquainted with some of the most prominent—made so by their forwardness in publishing and advocating righteousness of thought, faith and life.

HUGH HASTINGS

is a "beloved physician," and a brother in faith and hope. He is a sturdy, weather-beaten soldier, has made many attacks, and stood hosts of onslaughts. He is a brother of culture, intelligence and geniality, and is more with us than some other of the brethren, indeed I do not think I should be far from truth to say he is altogether with us. He is "old Catholic" and "old orthodox" on the state of the dead; and his faith, as I gathered it, is that the day of God is nigh at hand. He is author of two works—Hades, and Eternal Life in Christ only. The latter appeared first as an article in the Rainbow, but a lady admired it to such an extent that she reprinted it in pamphlet form at her own expense. What encouraging news he tells your correspondent! Since seeing light in God's light, he has been the vessel for enlightening about a hundred others, through his own immediate labors. Going about as he does in his professional capacity, into the higher and more aristocratic circles, opportunities are afforded him to preach Jesus as the Resurrection and the Life, and he does not hesitate, though using cautiousness and prudence, to declare the divine glory of Jesus as—not simply the eternal happiness, as heterodoxy teaches, but—the eternal life also. And not only has he spread the knowledge of the truth by personal effort, but his indirect influence, through the converts he has made by the word, only the day of God shall reveal. One "elect lady," the one who published the work I referred to above, has alone been the means of turning two or three ministers from fables. God bless Br. Hastings. Last evening, by his kind invitation, Br. Brown and myself took tea with him, and met at his house a company of noble Christian persons, with whom we conversed on the Hadean state; but it was difficult to arrange and pour in argument in volume, because of the hopping about from one truth to another.

WARDLAW SCOTT

was one of the distinguished guests and party. He has a great heart. He is a charterer of vessels for the South American service, and I believe, an insurance agent. For many years he has been associated with a mission—if I have learned correctly it was of his own founding. Br. Scott's heart is likely to overbalance his judgment. He wants everybody saved. In this our heart is as large as his own. We cannot condemn him for having a great, all-entrancing desire. We only discover in that heart-greatness a resemblance to our God who "will have all men to be saved and come to a knowledge of the truth." It is God's good pleasure—the generosity of his love is so; but it is not his determined will that all must come. Our Savior plainly shows us one class on his right hand, and the other sent away with the word "depart," no intimation being once given of their return. So Br. Scott makes a great deal of hades, and hopes to get many out at the other end of it "ready" for God, and fit for the kingdom. It rather amused us to hear him say last night it was his fancy. Thank God, then, we should be sorry to know it was his settled belief. But I know if you could only see and talk with Br. Scott you would love him, for he is gentle and lovable. He is author of God Misunderstood.

PREBENDARY CONSTABLE

was present at the gathering. But then to speak of him to you is like repeating "household words." What house is there of the two hundred thousand Advent body where his name is unknown? And he is just such a man as you think him to be. Clear, simple, great, good, would be about one's estimate of him. Clerical of course—pardon me Prebendary—but none the worse for that. Evidently he is real, natural, matter-of-fact. To him conscious immaterial souls are the creatures of the imagination, and not the creatures of God. He is determined in thought, settled in manner, immovable in truth. He studiously avoids metaphysical questions, such as, "What is the spirit of life?" He spoke kindly of the editor of The Times, of Chicago, also made some remarks concerning Br. Grant. A great theologue I learn is in correspondence with him, who rather favors his views. But his name for a time must be suppressed. In due season the theological world may lose another of its stars. The Rainbow, I gather, must shut our good brother Constable out of its pages, or be snuffed out of existence. Many who are reformed in this land are only half out, and it is too great for them to give up all of heathenism. They still hold on to a life in death, in the upper or lower region of hades; and so it disturbs them to read the sunlight effusions of our brother on the subject. "The fear of man bringeth a snare;" and many fear to be called "Materialists." May our Redeemer deliver such of his servants, who are bound in fetters of fear. It would be a grand thing if we could start a penny weekly paper here. And especially if the Advent Mission Society of America should aid in its establishment. It would cost about $1,000 a year to issue it. I think that Prebendary would write some trenchant matter for its columns. Sincerely do I hope that our casual meeting at Br. Hastings' may mature into a long and closer acquaintance. His works are numerous.

NATHANIEL STARKEY

is a kinsman in Christ Jesus. He is a grain merchant, having an office in the Corn Exchange, Mark Lane. He lives in Hackney, and has an estimable wife and family. He is a son of Anak for stature; but a man of rare and splendid parts, full of love and wisdom. He gave us "boys" a father's counsel, in a deep and suggestive manner. We drank tea with him one evening and read together the 20th of the Revelation. There were some differences of thought between us, yet we could not but abide in love one toward another, realizing that on either side an error of judgment was not a moral delinquency. The kind-heartedness of this "child of the Father" is known to some of the saints. We learn that he has a free chapel of his own, and that he supports an evangelist to do missionary work. For his profession of the faith he has much to suffer; but he must succeed since he only carries one motto and one influence with him, that all-conquering power, love. He has a special faculty for writing on this theme. Two little works of his—Brotherly Love and Christian Moderation—are known and admired in many families. But they are only his own renewed heart in print.

But time would fail me to go on speaking of many worthy of your acquaintace; of Br. A. Rhodes, an accomplished musician, and of all the rest of the brethren whose acquaintance it has been my privilege to make. Methinks, beloved, when we have all finished our course with joy, and are gathered around the King and the throne, there will be many a cordial greeting between the saved of England and America. I must just say one word more, and I shall then finish this imperfect sketch. We were greeted at Dr. Hastings' as brethren from America, not I understand merely in our own name, but as a friendly outreach of heart to those also with whom we are connected, even to you of like precious faith. So that through your representatives and brethren England offers you the right hand of fellowship. I trust you will in return never cease to desire for each and all the best blessings of the Father, —the gifts of the spirit of wisdom, love and life eternal. Peace be with you all! Amen.

MY JOURNAL.

Saturday, Dec. 14, went to Buchanan, Mich. I also met with the church on the Sabbath. They had a conference meeting, and I took part with them morning and evening. There was a good attendance, a deep interest, and many spoke. Br. Richards opened the meeting by reading Acts 3, with interesting remarks. Dr. F. H. Berrick, who resides here as a practising physician, and is preaching occasionally, was present. He said he sympathized with the spirit of the meeting and the themes that had been presented; that he early drank in the spirit of the Advent doctrine and hope, and he loved it still.

The church have invited Dr. Mathewson, of Union, Ind., to visit them for a time, with a view to remain if all parties should be agreed. The church is in good condition, waiting for "that blessed hope."

Wednesday, Dec. 18. The Board of the Western Publishing Association met at Norwood Park to-day. There was a full attendance, and entire unity in their action. They are fully determined to carry out the great and glorious objects of the Association, to spread the truth of the coming One, as they have means, far and wide.

When the friends of the Association remember that it is not ten years since it was organized, and that in these years it has had to struggle as a pioneer institution in a missionary field, with opposition without and weakness and poverty within, they may well be surprised at what has been done in every department of its work.

And now, after about ten years of successful toil, in which we have had the greatest encouragement, we are led to inquire with deep interest, What of the future? Shall we toil on as we are now doing, or shall we unite upon plans of enlargement, with a view of accomplishing more in time to come? The field is large. A wide and effectual door is opened to us in the publishing line. Books and tracts are called for on all the great themes connected with Bible Christianity. And there are next to none to supply the demand. Manuscripts of very important works are laid by for want of a publisher. And others are being prepared which may share a similar fate. But the question may arise just here, Why does not the Association publish these works? The answer is at hand. It has no publishing fund to do so. They have already published to the extent of their ability.

And just here I want to say some things which I did not feel as much at liberty to say when an officer and member of the Board. I am now outside, and can speak freely as a friend, and as one who is as deeply interested in the future success of the Association and its grand mission, as any other one can be, and also as well acquainted with every step of its progress from its incipient stages to its present more perfect form.

The Association is coming into a crisis. The late removal to Chicago has given it new and important advantages. But for the time it has also increased the expenses. But while it has increased the expenses by the removal and outlay, it has put the Association into a position to add to the extent of its work and usefulness many fold. And here comes the crisis. We have increased our responsibilities, demanding more work at our hands. Providence has laid upon us new responsibilities which are to be met, or we shall be placed in the position of the unfaithful servant. "Talents" are now in our hands to be improved. God has given us the field and work, and says, "Occupy till I come." He has given us stewards the talents, on material means to keep the press running night and day if we will. Here is the crisis. We have fairly come up to it, and the question which God is now propounding to the Western Adventists and their friends is, will you assume this new responsibility, and do this additional work? or, Will you hesitate, shrink back, and die? Forward is life and success. To remain stationary is impossible. Unless we make a spirited and liberal movement forward we shall retrograde. We shall lose our prestige and power to stand still or to be satisfied with present attainments will be fatal. We must make a forward movement.

The question then will come up just here, as to what this forward movement means? To which I will reply:

But before I do this I will say a word as to the past history of the action of the Association. We have always worked in advance of our material means, and trusted in God for support in this way of working. We have had no idea that God would sustain us in answer to prayer, with no foresight or prudent action of our own; yet we have trusted in God, and have not been disappointed. In other words, we have been sustained in what might be called risks, in going beyond our means. And we felt impelled to this advance movement because the people were so slow to help, and we could not feel that it was right to be tardy in this hour for action, and, withal, so near the end. But the Association is now in a position where it cannot make a forward move, as in time past, without help, and special help from its patrons. It has some debts which ought to be met. But the special need is in the publishing fund. The Association ought to have this very day five thousand dollars, in order to enter upon the work that is imperatively demanded by the times, and meet the calls for our literature in book and tract form, together with the wider circulation of The Times. As I have said, not being a member of the Board, I can speak the more freely. Brethren and sisters of the Advent faith in the West, and friends of the Association everywhere, help is needed to carry on our work. Ten thousand dollars could be used to the greatest and most glorious advantage. And this would be but a trifle among the well-to-do, or wealthy Adventists. But I have spoken of five thousand dollars as the help specially needed to carry on our work. And I call special attention to this proposal. Do not let the matter pass as one in which you, brethren and sisters, have no interest. For you do have an interest in it, a very special interest. Neither should any say I am not able to do anything, or but little, if any, and what is that towards making up thousands? Well, five thousand littles, from as many persons, would make the sum. Think of this. The ocean is made up of drops. Fill your place, and set the example, and let the rest come.

And then, this matter should not be put off on account of other claims. How natural it is to say, I have my paper to pay for, and our minister to support, and have many calls for charity, and the times are hard. We can all bring up a long list of excuses, or reasons why we cannot do as we would, but any or all these reasons put together, do not furnish one good reason why we should not do something, however little. Yes, we can all do something. We all ought to do something. It will do us good to do something. The Dord help us to do something for the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association.

The measure of our duty will be the measure of our ability to do. And the estimate of our ability by ourselves will be the measure of what we do. If a man feels that two dollars a year, as his subscription to The Times, is all he can do, though he may possess his thousands, yet this is all he will do, and sometimes he feels as though he could not spare this. He sets the mark low. He can never rise higher unless he opens his heart and sets the mark higher.

We must consider the question, "How much owest thou my Lord?" Do we owe the cause of the "Coming One" anything? Is there a debt?

Is this debt to Christ honestly due? Ought we to pay it? And then, will we pay it? When the Savior says "Occupy till I come," he means that we shall work all we can, and give all we can. In all our business arrangements we should calculate that a part of our income belongs to God. Yes, it belongs to him. And if we do not pay it into the Lord's treasury it will stand against us in the day of final account. God's way of spreading the truth and saving men is by the liberality of his stewards. He gives to them and bids them in turn to see to it that his cause does not suffer want, or languish for lack of support in any department.

That God notices these things will appear from his own words, (Mal. 3: 8–10.) "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring all the tithes into the store-house, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open to you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

1. Here it is very plain, that God demands, and he expects his people to give freely for the support of his cause, "Bring all your tithes into the store-house."

2. He watches to see if this is done. More when he sees that we are delinquent he calls us to an account, "Ye have robbed me." Ah! "Will a man rob God?" "Yet ye have robbed me!"

3. If we fail to support his cause the curse and displeasure of God will follow. There is no escape. But,

4. If we do fulfill our obligations, and give as the Lord has prospered us, he will "open the windows of heaven, and pour us out a blessing." This has always followed. A liberal support brings a liberal blessing. Prosperity and thrift follow. And it is on this principle that the Western Adventists account for their success in the past decade. Had it not been for some liberal souls, East and West, who poured their substance into the Lord's treasury, we should not only not have prospered, but we should not now have a visible existence. We should have been dead. It has been, however, the few and not the many that have done this. Many have only paid for the paper, and nothing more. Many have paid nothing. But with the few liberal souls, and many faithful patrons, the Association has been made to live and prosper, and do much and give much. Thank God for all this. But we still cry for greater things.

Why should giving be confined to the few? Why not the many give? Why not? Do you know any reason, brethren, why the many should not lay by as the Lord has prospered them and give it into the Lord's treasury on the first day of the week? If you do, I do not. This is not equal. It is not just. It is not right. Can I possibly get the attention of any who have not done their duty in this direction? Or can I induce such to view this matter in the light of Christian obligation?

Just here, many will ask, And what can I do? Tell me anything I can do, and I think I can, and I will do it if it is the Lord's will. Well, are you a subscriber to THE TIMES? Yes, I am. Can you not make an effort to add another to the list? You can. Now, suppose each subscriber should do this. It would add more than twenty thousands readers. This would be doing something, would it not?

Again, you can scatter our literature in the form of books and tracts, and these again will add readers to the inquiring crowd who seek light on the coming of Jesus. You can do this. Will you?

Again, there are those to whom God has given this world's goods, to give to help publish the truth. And their donations are specially needed for the publishing department. Each steward, who has this world's goods, should arrange and give. They should take special pains to find out the wants of the office, and seeing them to be important, should give, and give liberally. Why should Mr. Constable's great work lay on the shelf unpublished, when there are thousands and tens of thousands of dollars in the hands of Western Adventists? I can not tell why. Who, then, will look at this and other things that ought to be done? Who will give us a lot of paper? or, who will pay for the ink and printing? Who will set this book and tract business in motion? If it is started right, it will go, and all will rejoice in it. Let us wake up to this subject, and let us put forth a special effort in this work of God.

I did not think, when I began, to say but a few words, but I have said many. The Board know nothing of my writing. It is from inward promptings, arising from a knowledge I have of the condition of things. The kingdom is nigh; let us work while it is day.

THURSDAY, Dec. 10. Heard Br. Hastings, at Green Street Chapel. I had not seen him since the great fire in Boston, in which he lost his office. He appears well, and in good cheer. He is being remunerated all over the country; for which we are heartily glad. He spoke on prayer and answers to prayer. A precious theme—well treated.

FRIDAY, Dec. 20. Br. Hastings called at our office, on Lake street, and spent an hour. He gave me something in detail of the great fire, and his losses by it. The better portion of his private library was saved, with some of his stereotype plates. The plates of the Greek Concordance were saved. But almost everything else is gone to ashes and dust. We ask why, in the providence of God, such an institution should be destroyed? I can wait on him, however. "God is his own interpretor." We can wait. He will make it plain in good time. Br. Hastings is not fully settled as to his future, and waits the direction of Providence. God will direct.

JOSHUA V. HIMES.

Notes by Way.

In answer to a call from the N. W. Missouri and South West Iowa Conference to come and labor among them as an evangelist, I left my home in Illinois Dec. 6. Stopped at Wyanet, where Br. L. F. Cole was holding a protracted meeting, and by his urgent request I consented to preach in the evening. There was a good attendance and considerable interest manifested. I considered the situation as quite encouraging, and with the earnest and judicious efforts of Br. Cole, I have hope that the cause there will be greatly revived. May the Lord grant it. Leaving Wyanet I came to Frederick, Iowa, Saturday evening, taking up my abode with Br. C. Farnsworth for the Sabbath. Here I found also Br. Wm. M. Rankin whom I baptised in Wayne Co. some two years ago. This Br. has since met with a severe accident. Being caught in the belting of a steam mill, he had his right arm completely torn out from its socket at the shoulder, from which he has suffered exceedingly. But the blessed hope has cheered him amid all his affliction. He with his wife and Br. Farnsworth and wife constitute all the Adventists of the place, and they are letting their lights shine.

Sunday morning in company with these brethren I went to the Methodist meeting, expecting to hear a sermon, but was disappointed in hearing from another. Being pressed to preach myself I accepted the invitation, and in the name of the Lord held up his truth. Oh! glorious truth! Being urged to preach again in the evening I concluded to serve them as best I could in the delivery of seven sermons in one, occupying an hour and a half. I was listened to with the deepest interest. I consented to remain another evening, and concluded to deliver to them in the name of the Lord another broadside of seven sermons in one, wherein the Lord greatly helped in the leveling and discharge; and although the range was long, the truth took effect and many became interested. If I could have remained a little longer, I think the slain would have been many. But I was compelled to leave to fill other engagements. May the Lord water the seed sown. I arrived at Hopkins, Mo. on the 10th. I am now in my field of labor where, if the Lord so orders, I expect to devote the rest of my time for the ensuing year. Oh! for wisdom and strength from on high to sound the glad tidings in the regions beyond. Near Hopkins I met with Br. McGlothlan (formerly of Ionia, Ill.) where a door was opened to the word of the Lord. Preached twice and was well received.

Friday came to the Clear Creek Conference arriving in good time. In the journey I passed over some of the most lovely prairie country I ever saw; thousands of acres of it lying vacant and unimproved. I wondered why it was that so many in Southern Illinois would remain away down in Egypt among the heavy timber and bluffs and rocks and stumps and make farms, where it is so unhealthy too, and leave these broad acres and healthy climate unoccupied and unimproved. As for me, let me have the fresh currents of air, and room to expand; and here we can have both, with land at from six to ten dollars an acre.

At Clear Creek I met Br. Hink, who extended a hearty greeting. The Conference here at first looked very discouraging, but as the time progressed, the meeting grew interesting, and before its close it was truly good to be there. In this immediate vicinity occurred that unheard of tragedy, the murder of a whole family of emigrants, by the name of Arms, in all five persons were returning from Kansas to Minnesota. Mr. Arms and wife, with two little innocents from two to four years of age, and Mr. Dixon, brother of Mrs. Arms, were all murdered and loaded into their wagon and hauled for days, in one mangled mass, through town and country, the murderer camping at night with the victims of his blood-thirsty passion, one of whom he had chopped in two with an ax to enable him to lift his victims into the wagon. Thus he traveled for days, with these ghastly, mutilated corpes staring him in the face. It is enough to chill the blood of the most hardened criminal to think of it. And this the boasted age of Millennial dawn, the era of the world's conversion! Oh, no! it is Paul's "last days," and "perilous times." May God help us to realize it, and preach it, too; and warn men to prepare for the soon-coming judgment.

Well, brethren of this Conference, I am now here in your midst, and here, I trust, in the good providence of God who has seen fit to cast my lot among you. And I am here for work. I am well in body, and rejoicing in the Lord, desiring to do all that I can for the upbuilding of the cause of God among you, with your hearty co-operation. It is desired that I should remain in this section a short time, and then travel North into Iowa, visiting the churches, and encouraging and strengthening them, and, also, open new fields and new interests. Hence I desire the brethren in S. W. Iowa to correspond with me at Maryville, Mo., directing to the care of Br. D. O. Hink, who will know of my whereabouts while in this section. Do not delay or hesitate to write, stating your wants and desires for my labors. I can only be in one place at a time, and if I can have your wishes made known in time, I can better arrange the campaign, and will do the best I can to meet the demand.

Above all, pray earnestly that the Lord make our coming among you a blessing to many.

I expect to spend a few days at Quitman, and a week or more at Sand Creek, a new field, and then a short time with the Highland church. May the God of Israel bless and cheer our hearts with a special outpouring of his Spirit, and the infusion of new life among us all. Awake! Awake, my brethren, to the responsibility of the hour! WM. MCCULLOCH.

From LeRoy Curtis.

Dear brethren and sisters in Christ: I take this method to inform you that I was once blind through the hearing of traditional doctrines taught by our so-called othodox teachers, that now I thank God that I see; I was brought up in the straightest sect a Baptist, and I became a member of the Baptist church several years ago, and have remained a Baptist until recently. And they still claim me as a member, but I have found new light. In the fall of 1872 Br. R. L. Harrison commenced a series of meetings at our district school house. He seemed at first to be a setter forth of strange doctrines; but I have found by a diligent search of the Scriptures that they were not strange doctrines, but, on the contrary, they were in perfect harmony with God's word. There is a little company of us here that have sprang up and may be styled Second Adventists—say ten or twelve all told—and we are waiting for the second coming of Christ to set up his kingdom on the renewed earth. We believe that that event is close by; that the midnight cry is being made, "Go ye out to meet him!" Let us all have our lamps filled, trimmed and brightly burning, that we may go in with him to the marriage.

I have been taught in former days that men were judged and rewarded at death; but my Bible teaches me that after the resurrection of the dead, judgment and reward come. I have been taught that the wages of sin is eternal life in hell. My Bible tells me "the wages of sin is death;" that "the soul that sinneth, it shall die;" that the wicked shall be destroyed, burnt up root and branch. I have been taught by men that we have natural immortality; but why then "seek for" it. Now which shall I believe: men's teachings or God's word? I believe my Bible, for there is an abundance of testimony there to prove these things.

We are favored occasionally with preaching by Brn. R. L. Harrison and J. Wilber—at our private residences—the school house being closed against us. Thank God that we have houses of our own and that we can worship him under our own vine and fig tree. Our Bible teaches us that all who would live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. But I believe the time is soon coming when the wicked will cease from troubling and the weary be at rest in God's glorious kingdom. Signs portend that the Holy City, New Jerusalem, will soon "come down from God out of heaven, and then the tabernacle of God will be with men, and he will dwell with them and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God."

From Jno. T. Ongley.

The truth is taking hold of some noble hearts. At one of our preaching places, a Baptist brother came forward after preaching, stating that he liked our preaching and the spirit manifested and concluded to purchase some of our books and read for himself. Four weeks after he was at our meeting again, and said, "Your books have almost made an Adventist of me." He purchased among the rest "Good Tidings," and took the same to his minister to have him read. But he said that it was nothing new; that the doctrine it contained had been exploded time and again. The brother thought that was bad for his minister to say, for he considered the major part of the book was Scriptural. The brother and wife, and father are out on the truth. He said, "I am happy all the time. The Scriptures are so plain I have learned more in a few weeks than I have learned in all my life." At another place the train on the railroad that I was traveling on was too late for me to connect as I expected to do and therefore I had to stop over until the next day, I have thought that perhaps the Lord so ordered it; for in the evening a gentleman and lady were invited in where I was stopping. They had been brought up strictly among the Methodists; but after our conversation, they purchased the "Bible Triumphant," "Good Tidings," Whitmore's "Immortality." The result. When I came back I found they were truly converted to the faith, and they had also been the means of converting two others. Praise the Lord. I do feel to give him all the glory.

I might refer to other cases where the truth has taken deep root. I don't know which is the best, the preaching of the word or the scattering of the books and tracts. A "Paul may plant." "Apollos water." but we must look to the Lord for the increase. Dear Lord give me wisdom, and humility, and strength to do his will, is my daily prayer.

The subscriptions for the Tent have swelled up to this date to $220; amount needed $350.

C. C. MARSTON, Sec.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Report of the Advent Christian Conference held at the corner of Ninth and Spring Garden Streets, Philadelphia.

According to appointment a meeting was held, commencing on Thursday eve., Nov. 28, the object of which was to organize a Conference embracing the following territory: Eastern part of Pennsyvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia, for the purpose of extending and promoting the cause of truth. There was a good attendance, mostly of those living near. There were representatives present from New Jersey and Pennsylvania. The preaching brethren present were Elds. H. K. Flagg, of Massachusetts, William Ashman, H. Taylor, I. N. Wilfong of Pennsylvania, L. Reimer of New Jersey. There was an excellent spirit pervading the meeting. A number spoke of the importance of united action. On Friday eve. Eld. Flagg preached from 2 Pet. 2:1. At the close of the discourse it was voted that Saturday eve. be set apart for special business. At that time Dr. Jayne of Moorstown, N. J., was chosen Chairman. H. K. Flagg spoke of the good that might be accomplished by organizing a Conference and having tents in the field. Others advocated and urged the same, for the reason that in the territory named there were people in towns and villages that had never heard the glorious truths we hold dear. A motion was made that a committee of five be appointed to further the object of the Conference and whose duty shall be to take steps toward a permanent organization. The motion was amended by adding two more to the committee. The two to be constituted a committee at large, to confer with brethren abroad. Adopted. The naming of the committee was left to the Chairman, subject to the approval of the church. The following brethren were appointed: Committee at large —Eld. H. K. Flagg of Massachusetts, I. N. Wilfong of Philadelphia. Committee of five —Brethren F. E. Davis, H. Stetler, I. Nichols, of Philadelphia, L. Reimer, W. Fay, of New Jersey.

It was voted that the minutes of the proceedings be sent to the World's Crisis and the ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES. On Sunday morning met at 10 for prayer and conference, and a number of stirring testimonials were given. Preaching at 11, and also in the evening, by H. K. Flagg. Thus ended our first attempt to organize a Conference. We desire the prayers and co-operation of the children of God that it may prove a blessing to the cause and be the means of spreading the truth in those regions where our influence has hitherto been comparatively unfelt.

Accounts Due.

There is a large sum due on Book Accounts, in sum varying from one to fifty dollars and upwards. Prompt payment will greatly relieve our finances. It is only a little for each one; but the aggregate is large amount.

Some to whom we sent 'Statements of Account' last summer have never made any reply at all. We want to hear from you, and soon. These many little items make up a heavy burden for us to carry. 'Let every one bear their own burden,' and our own will be very much lighter.

Renew Your Subscriptions.

We are sending notices to all our subscribers whose time expires this year. In some cases we receive remittances after these notices are prepared and forwarded to the postoffice. If any receive notices after they have sent in their renewals, they can keep the 'return envelope' for another occasion.

We have waited patiently upon hundreds of our subscribers for months, and, in some cases two years or more. We trust now every one will promptly remit for past dues, and for six months or a year in advance.

Obituary.

MAIN.—Fell asleep in Jesus, at Minonk, Ill., on Friday, Oct. 11, of Spotted Fever, Melissa Alza, youngest daughter of William and Mary A. Main, aged 2 years, 6 months, and 8 days.

While gone from home some thirty-five miles to see our eldest daughter, who was very sick, after we had been there seven days, we got a despatch to come home; and before we got home our little child was cold in death. It was a great shock to us, but we sorrow not as those who have no hope. Words of comfort by Br. Wm. McCullock, from 1 Thes. 4: 13. W. M.

HAKES.—In Monticello, Iowa, Sep. 24, 1872, Sr. Rosalie A. Hakes, aged 29 years and 11 months.

She was the oldest daughter of Br. and Sr. Wire, and grandchild of the old veteran, Father Pomery, who was for 60 years a Methodist preacher. She embraced the Advent faith two years ago, and was baptized at Monticello, Iowa, as many who see this will remember. Sr. H. was a devoted Christian, and caused her influence to be felt in the circle in which she moved. Her afflicted mother, who sympathized in her faith and hope, is now left alone. Pray for her.

ISAAC ADRIAN.

GRANT—Fell peacefully asleep in Christ, in the town of Woodland, Barry Co., Mich., Dec. 14, 1872, Sr. Grant, aged 50 years.

Sr. Grant leaves a large circle of friends, besides her loving husband, but not to mourn as those who have no hope. She was fully resigned to the will of her Master, and said she was going to rest. It was blessed to look upon her countenance when she had fallen asleep in Christ. The very large attendance at her funeral showed the wide respect in which she was held. The text for the occasion, chosen by her companion, was 2 Cor. 15: 1. "If this earthly house of this tabernacle, were dissolved we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." May the Lord sanctify this bereavement to the special good of the large circle of friends, and especially to the bereaved husband. P. HOLLER.

The Destiny of Man.

We have examined this work by Br. Wm. Erwin, of the Methodist church, and ordered a supply to accommodate our customers. The author takes up the Scriptures, or most of them which bear directly upon the subject indicated, and searches to know the mind of the Spirit. A large number of copies of the work have been sold among Christians of other churches and it cannot fail to do good. It is finely printed, and bound in full gilt. Price by mail, prepaid, $1.50.

Special—The Christian.

When the Scriptural Tract Repository was burned, one list of subscribers, containing all names and monies received at the Amboy Campmeeting was destroyed. All persons who subscribed, or paid money, or whose friends subscribed for the "Christian" there, will confer a great favor by at once notifying the publisher.

THE New York Independent has announced an increase of price from $2.50 to $3.00 a year. It also announces a change of form from the large pages now so familiar, to a more convenient size for easy reading. The reconstruction of this sterling journal will doubtless add to its already unsurpassed excellencies, and make it the religious journal of the world. Its editors and contributors are of eminent ability. Its resources for best of thoughts, for new things, and late phases of religious, political and scientific literature, are unquestionably beyond those of any American weekly.

Notice.

I am now engaged in preparing a work for the press to be called "A History of the first Twenty Years of the Advent Cause in Northern Illinois, from 1853 to 1873." It is designed to give a minute account of all the Conferences held, together with a history, biographical and statistical, of all, the churches and ministers connected with the Conference from its first organization to the close of the year 1873.

Will the brethren, and specially those who have been associated with the church from the beginning, be so kind as to write out any items of interest connected with the cause in their vicinity, and send them to me for my assistance in this work. I hope to have it ready for publication during the comin summer.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an inquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R.," running from Chicago through Galesburg to Burlington, has achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Route to the West. At Burlington it connects with the great Burlington Route which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Chicago on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the C. B. & Q. and Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.
